INTRODUCTION.

Chaucer was, like Spenser, Ben Jonson, Milton, etc., a Londoner born and bred. In his Release of his right to his father's former house in Thames-street, London, to one Henry Herbury, the poet describes himself as son of John Chaucer, citizen and vintner of London (City Hustings Roll, 110, 5 Ric. II, membrane 2). His mother was no doubt Agnes Chaucer, who is described in another Roll as the wife of John Chaucer in 1349. Chaucer's grandfather was Robert Chaucer, of Ipswich and London, who married a widow, Maria Heyroun, with a son Thomas Heyroun. (Her third husband was Richard Chaucer, a London vintner.) This Thomas Heyroun left his land to be sold by his brother (that is, brother of the half-blood) John Chaucer, the poet's father. As John Chaucer's house in Thames-street was by Walbrook—a stream flowing from Finsbury Moor—it must have been near the spot where the South Eastern Railway (from Cannon-street) now crosses Thames-street. There, on Thames bank, the poet spent his earliest days; there for twelve and a half years later, 1374–1386, he did his daily work in the Custom House, after his marriage and settling down in his rooms at Aldgate. Near there he must have gone to school. Out of school and after play, the boy would probably sometimes help his father in his wineshop and cellar, and fill citizens' pots with the wine they required.

Young men in Chaucer's time finished their education either at the University, or in some nobleman's house as pages. Chaucer's father (John) was in attendance on Edward III and his queen Philippa in their expedition to Flanders and Cologne in 1338 (Rymer, v. 51); and to the father's connection with the court, the son no doubt owed his training and first appointment.

The first records of the name of Geoffrey Chaucer are on two parchment leaves, fragments of a Household Account, a The Testament of Love, which names London as the birthplace of its writer, contains internal evidence that it was not the poet's work.

INTRODUCTION.

for the years 1356 to 1359, of Elizabeth, wife of Prince Lionel, third son of Edward III; and they contain, besides other things, entries of—(1) in April 1357, 'An entire suit of clothes, consisting of a paltock' (or short cloak), 'a pair of red and black breeches, with shoes, provided for Geoffrey Chaucer;b;' (2) on May 20, 1357, an article of dress, of which the name is lost by a defect in the leaf, purchased for Geoffrey Chaucer in London; (3) in December of the same year, a donation of 2s. 6d. to Geoffrey Chaucer, for 'necessaries.' That this Geoffrey Chaucer was the poet is almost certain. But the next and very important record as to Chaucer is quite certain. It heads his own statement, in a deposition made by him at Westminster in October 1386, at the famous trial between Richard Lord Scrope and Sir Robert Grosvenor. The Council-clerk then entered Chaucer—no doubt by the poet's own authority—as forty years of age and upwards, and as having borne arms for twenty-seven years.

If then we take Chaucer's 'forty years and upwards' as forty-six, we fix the date of his birth at 1340; and this would make him seventeen years old when he was in Prince Lionel's household, probably as a page, as the sums paid for his dress, and given to him, are a good deal lower than those allotted to other members of the household. This date would also make Chaucer nineteen when, doubtless in the retinue of Prince Lionel, he joined Edward the Third's army, which invaded France in the autumn of 1359, and was taken prisoner in that country, as he himself informs us. (Against this date of 1340 as that of the poet's birth used to be set the traditional date of 1328. But the Petition of Geffrey Stace in 1328—see Rolls of Parliament, ii. 14—expressly states that John Chaucer (the poet's father, whom Stace and his confederates had forcibly carried off from London in December 1324) was then still unmarried, 'unkore dismarie;' and living with his mother Maria, and his stepfather Richard Chaucer. Moreover, the Coram-Rege Roll of Trinity Term, 5 Edward III, A.D. 1331, shows no plea by Geffrey Stace that John Chaucer had then married the Joan de Esthalle whom they tried to marry him to in 1324.) Chaucer's position in Prince Lionel's household would, says Mr. Bond, have given him 'the benefit of society of the highest refinement, in personal attendance on a young and spirited prince of the blood. He would have had his imagination fed by scenes of the most brilliant court festivities e, rendered more imposing by the splendid triumphs with which they were connected; and he would have had the advantage of royal patrons in the early exercise of his genius.' He would have been helped in 'perfecting that gift which so transcendentally distinguishes him from the versifiers of his time—refinement of expression in his own language'—a gift which his first poems show as well as his last. It is quite certain that Chaucer was a diligent student and a man of the most extensive learning. 'The acquaintance he possessed with the classics, with divinity, with astronomy, with so much as was then known of chemistry, and indeed with every other branch of the scholastic learning of the age, proves that his education had been particularly attended to d.'

Chaucer's military career commenced, as we have seen, in the year 1359, at which time he must have joined Edward the Third's army, which invaded France in the beginning of November of that year. After ineffectually besieging Rheims the English army laid siege to Paris (1360), when at length, suffering from famine and fatigue, Edward made peace at Bretigny near Chartres. This treaty, called the 'Great Peace,' was ratified in the following October, and King John was set at liberty. In this expedition Chaucer was made prisoner, and on March 1, 1360, Edward III paid 16l. towards Chaucer's ransom; 13s. 4d. less than he gave another man for a horse.

e That most splendid entertainment given by Edward III (in 1358) to the royal personages then in England—including the King of France, the Queen of Scotland, the King of Cyprus, and the sister of the captive King of France, and Edward's own mother, the almost forgotten Queen Isabella—at what was ever after called 'the Great Feast of St. George.' Chaucer was probably also present, with Prince Lionel, at the wedding of John of Gaunt and Lady Blanche of Lancaster, at Reading, and at the famous joustings subsequently held at London in honour of the event.

INTRODUCTION.

We have no means of ascertaining how he spent the next six years of his life, except from hints in our official records and the poet's own works. In 1367 the first notice of the poet occurs on the Issue Rolls of the Exchequer, when a pension of 20 marks for life was granted by the king to Chaucer as one of the 'valets of the king's chamber'—or, as the office was sometimes called, 'valet of the king's household'—in consideration of former and future services. This pension for 'former' services as well as future, leaves little doubt that Chaucer entered the king's household soon after his return to England. In this service the poet, then probably twenty-one, seems to have fallen desperately and hopelessly in love, probably with a lady above him in rank, who rejected him. His earliest original poem, his Compleynte to Pite (pity), which may have been written about 1367, after his rejection by his lady-love, tells us that for many years he dared not speak his feelings towards her, and when at last he did so, he found Pity dead in her heart; but still he pleads pathetically with her for her love, and declares that, though she still refuses it, and he desires only death, he will love her alone till that death comes. See also his Minor Poems, ed. Skeat, pp. 213-7.

a Issue Rolls of the Exchequer and the Tower Rolls. The details here are from Sir H. Nicolas' Life of Chaucer, prefixed to Chaucer's poetical works in the Aldine series of the Poets.

f A mark was 13s. 4d. of our money, but the buying power of money was at least ten times greater than at present. In 1350 the average price of a horse was 18s. 4d.; of an ox 1l. 4s. 6d.; of a cow 17s. 2d.; of a sheep 2s. 6d.; of a goose 9d.; of a hen 2d.; of a day's labour in husbandry 3d. In Oxford, in 1310, wheat was 10s. a quarter; in December 7s. 8d.; and in October, 1311, 4s. 10d.

g The old supposition that the 'Philippa' whom Chaucer married was the daughter of Sir Paon de Roet (a native of Hainault and King of Arms of Guienne) and sister to Katherine, widow of Sir Hugh Swynford, successively governess, mistress, and wife to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, was founded on heraldic grounds. The Roet arms were adopted by Thomas Chaucer. Then Thomas Chaucer was made (without the slightest evidence) Geoffrey's son, and Philippa Roet was then made Geoffrey's wife. Chaucer's wife Philippa was one of the ladies in attendance on Queen Philippa, and in 1366 a pension of 10 marks was granted to her. After the death of the queen she appears to have been attached to the court of Constance of Castile, second wife of John of Gaunt.
During the years 1368 and 1369, Chaucer was in London, and received his pension in person.

In 1369 (Aug. 15) the death of Queen Philippa took place, and in less than a month later, Blanche, the wife of John of Gaunt, died, at the age of twenty-nine. Chaucer did honour to the memory of his patron's wife in a funeral poem entitled 'The Deth of Blaunche the Duchesse.' And in this poem he tells us, though sadly, that his own hopeless eight years' love is cured, 'what will not be, must needs be left;,' or, as he says in Troilus,

'Criseyde loveth the sone of Tydeus,
And Troilus mot wepe in cares colde.
Swich is this world, whoso kan it biholde!
In ech estat is litil hertes reste!
God leve us for to take it for the beste!'

(Bk. V. st. ccli. ll. 1760-4.)

Chaucer's lines in the Blaunche (35-42) about his hopeless love, which are referred to above, are in answer to the question why he cannot sleep at night.

'Trewely, as I gesse,
I holde hit [moot] be a siknesse
That I have suffred this eight yere;
And yet my boote is never the nere;
For there is phisicien but oon
That may me hele. But that is doon.
Passe we over until eft;
That wil not be, moot nede be left.'

It was no good crying for the moon; and although the early shadow of disappointed love was still thrown over Chaucer's life, and made him tell of Troilus' sorrow, and sing the Complaint of Mars for his lost Venus, yet our poet was henceforth to work himself out into the freshness and brightness that still draw men to him as to spring sunshine.

^ And goedé fairé whyte she heet (was called),
That was my lady namé right.
She was bothé fair and bright,
She haddé not hir namé wrong.'

(Deth of Blaunche the Duchesse, ll. 948-951.)

INTRODUCTION.

In the course of the next ten years (1370-1380) the poet was attached to the court, and employed in no less than seven diplomatic services. In 1370 he was abroad in the king's service, and received letters of protection, to be in force from June till Michaelmas. Two years after this (Nov. 12, 1372) Chaucer was joined in a commission with two citizens of Genoa to treat with the doge, citizens, and merchants of Genoa, for the choice of an English port where the Genoese might form a commercial establishment. He appears to have left England before the end of the year, having on the 1st of December received the sum of 66l. 13s. 4d. in aid of his expenses. He remained in Italy nearly twelve months, and went on the king's service to Florence as well as to Genoa. His return to England must have taken place before the 22nd of Nov. 1373, as on this day he received his pension in person.

This was Chaucer's first important mission. It was no doubt skilfully executed, and gave entire satisfaction to the king, who on the 23rd of April, 1374, on the celebration of the feast of St. George, at Windsor, made him a grant of a pitcher of wine daily, to be received in the Port of London from the hands of the king's butler. On the 10th of May the Corporation of London granted Chaucer a lease for his life of the dwelling-house above the gate of Aldgate, with the rooms built over, and a certain cellar beneath, on condition that he kept these buildings in good k In this embassy Chaucer is supposed to have made acquaintanceship with Petrarch, who was at Arqua, two miles from Padua, in 1373, from January till September, and to have learned from him the tale of the patient Griselda. But it is not certain that the old biographers of Chaucer are to be trusted in this matter. If the date of the later editions of Petrarch's version can be trusted (there is no date in Ulrich Tell's first edition), Petrarch did not translate this tale from Boccaccio's Decameron into Latin until the end of Sept. 1373, after Chaucer's return [but some copies give the date June 8, 1373]. And though it is the Clerk of Oxenford, and not Chaucer, that asserts that he learned the tale of 'a worthy clerk' at Padua, 'Fraunces Petrarch, the laureate poete,' yet there can be no question that Chaucer's Clerk's Tale is an enlarged and adored translation of Petrarch's Latin version of Boccaccio's Italian story.

repair. About four weeks later, on the 8th of June, he was appointed Comptroller of the Customs and Subsidy of Wools, Skins, and Leather, in the Port of London \(^m\), and on the 13th of the same month he received a pension of 10l. for life from the Duke of Lancaster for the good service rendered by him and his wife Philippa to the said Duke, to his Consort, and to his mother the Queen. This is the first mention of Philippa Chaucer as Geoffrey's wife, though a Philippa Chaucer is named as one of the Ladies of the Chamber to Queen Philippa on Sept. 12, 1366, and subsequently. It is possible that Philippa Chaucer was a relative or namesake of Geoffrey, and that he married her in the spring or early summer of 1374; if not, he must have married her before Sept. 12, 1366.

Chaucer's Italian journey, and his study of Italian literature in consequence of it, exercised a marked influence on his writings, and opened the second period of his development, in which his Lyf of Seynt Cecile, Parlement of Foules, Compleynt of Mars, Anelida and Arcite, Boece, Former Age, Troilus, and House of Fame, were probably composed.

In 1375 Chaucer's income was augmented by receiving from the crown (Nov. 8) the custody of the lands and person of Edmond Staplegate of Kent, which he retained for three years, during which time he received as wardship and marriage fee the sum of 104l.; and (on Dec. 28) the custody of five ‘solidates’ of rent \(^n\) in Soles in Kent. Toward the end of 1376 Sir John Burley and Chaucer were employed in some secret service, the nature of which is not known. On the 23rd of the same month the poet received 6l. 13s. 4d., and Burley twice that sum, for the work upon which they had been employed.

In February 1377, the last year of Edward's reign, the poet was associated with Sir Thomas Percy (afterward Earl of Worcester)

\(^m\) In July 1376, Chaucer, as Comptroller of Wool Customs, received from the king the sum of 71l. 4s. 6d., being the fine paid by John Kent of London for shipping wool to Dordrecht without having paid the duty thereon.

\(^n\) A solidate of land was as much land (probably an acre) as was worth a shilling.
in a secret mission to Flanders, and was shortly afterwards (April) probably joined with Sir Guichard d'Angle (afterwards Earl of Huntingdon) and Sir Richard Sturry to treat of peace with Charles V, King of France. In 1377 Richard II succeeded to the throne, and Chaucer appears to have been reappointed one of the king's esquires. In January, 1378, he was probably sent with the Earl of Huntingdon to France to treat for a marriage of Richard with the daughter of the king of France. On his return he was employed in a new mission to Lombardy, along with Sir Edward Berkeley, to treat with Bernard Visconti, Lord of Milan (whose death Chaucer afterwards brought into his Monk's Tale) and Sir John Hawkwood, 'on certain affairs touching the expediting the king's war.' When Chaucer set out on this embassy he appointed Gower as one of his trustees to appear for him in the courts in case of any legal proceedings being instituted against him during his absence.

By deed of May 1, 1380, Cecilia Chaumpayne released Chaucer from his raptus of her. On the 8th of May, 1382, he was made Comptroller of the Petty Customs, retaining at the same time his office of Comptroller of the Wool Customs. These emoluments he continued to hold till Dec. 1, 1386, and in Feb. 1385 was allowed the privilege of nominating a deputy, so that he had perhaps now, or perhaps soon after the loss of his office, leisure to devote himself to his great work, the Canterbury Tales, which, though never completed, was written at different times of his life, from 1373 to "Chaucer received for this service 10l. on Feb. 17, and 20l. on April 11. Chaucer received 26l. 13s. 4d. on April 30, as part payment for this service, and in 1381 (March) he was paid an additional sum of 22l. Chaucer was absent on this service from May 28 to Sept. 19, but was not paid till 1380, when he received 56l. 13s. 4d." This circumstance proves the existence of an intimate friendship between the two poets. Chaucer dedicated his Troilus and Criseyde to Gower; and the latter poet, in the Confessio Amantis (Book viii.), makes Venus speak of Chaucer as follows:

'And grete wel Chaucer, whan ye mete,
As my disciple and my poete,
For in the floures of his youthe,
In sondry wyse, as he wel couthe,
1400, and prefaced by a Prologue, written on or about a journey in 1388. To this, the third period of his poetical life, also belong The Legende of Good Women (written about 1385), and Truth. (The 'Moder of God' formerly attributed to him is Hoccleve's.)

In 1386 Chaucer was elected a knight of the shire for Kent, in the Parliament held at Westminster. John of Gaunt was abroad at this time; and the Duke of Gloucester, at the head of the government, was most likely not well disposed towards the protégé of his brother, with whom he was now on ill terms. On the 1st of December, Chaucer was dismissed from his offices of Comptroller of Wool, Woolfells, and Leather, and of Comptroller of Petty Customs, and others were appointed in his place. The loss of his emoluments reduced the poet from affluence to poverty—his beautiful 'balade of Truth' ('Flee fro the prees') probably speaks his own feelings in this time of his distress—and we find him raising money upon his two pensions of 20 marks, which on the 1st of May, 1388, were cancelled and assigned to John Scalby. To add to his trouble, his wife died in 1387: yet in 1388 he made his merry Canterbury pilgrimage. Richard, in 1389, dismissed his council, and took the reins of government into his own hands; the Lancastrian party were restored to power, and Chaucer was appointed Clerk of the King's Works at Westminster, at a salary of 2s. a-day, about 1/10 of our money. The next year (1390) he was also appointed Clerk of the Works at St. George's Chapel, Windsor, and made one of a Commission to repair the Thames Banks between Woolwich and Greenwich, but was superseded in 1391. In 14 Rich. II (June, 1390-1), he was appointed joint Forester, with Rd. Brittle, of North Petherton Park in Somerset, by the Earl of March. He had besides, 10l. yearly from the Duke of Lancaster, and 40s. as the king's esquire. In a writ, dated July 1, 1390, Chaucer is allowed the costs of putting up scaffolds in Smithfield for the King and Queen to see the jousts which took place in May, 1390. Compare this with Kn. Tale, 1023-1034. In Sept., 1390, he was robbed, at Westminster, of 10l. of the King's money, and of 9l. 3s. 8d. near the 'foule ok' (foul oak) at Hatcham, Surrey; but the repayment of it was forgiven him. In 1391 Chaucer translated and compiled his Treatise on the Astrolabe, for his 'little son' Lewis. This was probably followed by his Fortune, Gentilesse, Lak of Stedfastnesse, his Envoys to Skogan and Bukton, the Compleynt of Venus, and his Compleynt to his Purse (in Sept. 1399).

So that my court it may recorde.'

5 The Parliament of 1386 compelled Richard to appoint a commission to enquire into the state of the subsidies and customs. The commissioners began their duties in November, and the removal of certain officers may be attributed to their investigations.

On the 28th of Feb., 1394, Chaucer obtained a grant from the king of 20l. a-year for life, payable half-yearly at Easter and Michaelmas; but at this time the poet appears to have been in very distressed circumstances, for we find him making application for advances from the Exchequer on account of his annuity, and as these were not always made to him personally during the next few years, he was probably ill. In 21 Rich. II (June, 1397-8), Alianor, Countess of March, made him sole Forester of North Petherton in Somerset.

In Easter Term, 1398, Isabella Buckholt sued Chaucer for 14l. 1s. 11d. The sheriff twice returned the poet as non inventus, though in 1398 (May 4) letters of protection were issued to Chaucer forbidding any one, for the term of two years, to sue or arrest him on any plea except it were connected with land. Five months later (Oct. 15) the king made him a grant of a tun of wine a-year for life. Next year Henry Bolingbroke, son of John of Gaunt, supplanted his cousin Richard, and within four days after he came to the throne Chaucer's pension of 20 marks was doubled—in addition to the annuity of £20, which had been given him by Richard II—doubtless in answer to the poet's Compleynt of his poverty, which was addressed to Henry IV, and hailed him as 'verray King by lyne and free eleccioun.'

On Christmas Eve, 1399, the poet covenanted for the lease for fifty-three years (a long agreement for a man in his fifty-ninth year to make), of a house in the garden of the Chapel of St. Mary, Westminster, where it is probable that he ended his days. The date (Oct. 25, 1400) assigned to his death by Nicholas Brigham is corroborated by the entries in the Issue Rolls, no note of payment being found after June 5th, 1400.

Thus on the bank of the noble river by which he was born and bred, on which for years his daily life was spent, our great early poet passed away. As he was at least sixty when he died, he was justly entitled to the epithets old and reverent, applied to him by his contemporaries Gower and Hoccleve.

Chaucer had one son, Lewis, who probably died young, to whom he addressed his treatise on the Astrolabe in 1391. There is no evidence whatever that Thomas Chaucer, who attained to immense wealth, and whose great-grandson, John de la Pole (Earl of Lincoln), was declared by Richard III heir-apparent to the throne, was Chaucer’s son, though he may have been a relative.

In the Prologue to The Rime of Sir Thopas, we have probably a faithful picture of Chaucer's personal appearance in 1388, agreeing in some points with his later portrait by Hoccleve. In person he was corpulent, and, like his host of the Tabard, 'a large man,' and no 'poppet' to embrace; but his face was small, fair, and intelligent, his eye downcast and meditative, but dazed by age and study. Altogether, he had an 'elvish' or weird expression of countenance, which attracted the attention of those who came into contact with him for the first time, and with whom he seems to have been reserved and reticent. His extensive acquirements and voluminous writings show that he was a hardworking student; from incidental allusions in The House of Fame, we learn that when his labours and 'reckonings' at the Custom House were over, and he returned home, instead of rest and novelties he sat and pored over his books until his eyes were 'dased' and dull; and often at night an aching head followed the making of 'books, songs, and ditties.' So absorbed was he in his studies, that for the time neither foreign affairs, his neighbours' gossip, 'nor anything else that God had made,' had any interest for him. Hermit-like though he lived, Chaucer was not naturally a recluse, and still less an ascetic: given more to observe than to talk, he loved good and pleasant society, and to sit at the festive board; for, as he himself tells us, 'his abstinence was but little.'

Though an essentially dramatic spirit pervades nearly the whole of his works, yet Chaucer is above all things a narrator, and we must reckon him among the objective and not the subjective poets; among the epic, of Goethe's threefold division of all poets into epic, dramatic, and lyrical. Yet he is subjective, lyrical, too. Chaucer himself is in all his original works: hopeless and sad in his early poems, bright and humourful in his later ones, poor and suppliant in his last. Among his chief characteristics are his delightful freshness and simplicity, his roguish genial humour—he was full of quaint fun—his heartfelt love of nature, his tender pathos, his knowledge of women—the naughty he quizzed in most happy style, and the good he honoured and praised with all his might—his love of his dear old books, his power of lifelike portraiture, his admirable story-telling, and the perfection of his verse. 'His best tales run on like one of our inland rivers, sometimes hastening a little and turning upon themselves in eddies that dimple without retarding the current; sometimes loitering smoothly, while here and there a quiet thought, a tender feeling, a pleasant image, a golden-hearted verse, opens quietly as a water-lily, to float on the surface without breaking it into ripple." Chaucer's ardent love of Nature, finely apostrophised by the poet as 'the vicar of the Almighty Lord,' is everywhere apparent. What is more spontaneous and characteristic of the poet than such joyous outbursts as the following?

'Herkneth thise blissful briddës how they singe,
And see the fresshe floures how they springe;
Ful is myn hert of revel and solas,'

INTRODUCTION.

Even his love and reverence for books gave way before an eager desire to enjoy the beauties of nature in that season of the year when all around him was manifesting life and loveliness.

Not less evident is Chaucer's high estimation of women, and his 'perception of a sacred bond, spiritual and indestructible, in true marriage between man and woman.' Of all the flowers in the mead, the daisy, 'the emperice and flour of floures alle,' was Chaucer's favourite, because to him it was the fit representative of the 'trouthe of womanhede'; Good Wom. 185, 297.

As Mr. Morley has well remarked, 'Ditties in praise of the Marguerite, or daisy, were popular with the French fashionable poets; but none of them, like Chaucer, among all their allegorical dreamings, ever dreamed of celebrating in that flower an emblem of womanly truth and purity, wearing its crown as a gentle, innocent, devoted wife.'

Though Chaucer was so intimately connected with the court, and enjoyed no small share of courtly favours, he protested nobly and fearlessly against the popular opinion that churls or villains (in the legal sense of the term, that is, persons of plebeian rank) were necessarily prone to be guilty of base and unworthy actions; and at the present day we can hardly appreciate the boldness which made him assert more than once that the true test of gentility is nobleness of life and courtesy of manners, and not mere ancestral rank, and which made him in the Persones Tale denounce the oppression of thralls or 'villeins' by their lords. (See Persones Tale, ed. Morris, iii. pp. 301, 332–334.)

As we have already said, Chaucer's great work, the Canterbury Tales, was not put together till after the year 1386. His earlier literary productions were mostly translations, or imitations from foreign sources, Latin, French, and Italian, and have therefore but little claim to originality, except so far as he altered or added to his originals; but even in these efforts there are many excellences and traces of the poet's genius, especially of his great power over language, which made his ability as a translator known and highly appreciated by his literary contemporaries. Francis Eustace Deschamps, in a 'Ballade à Geoffroi Chaucer,' speaks of him in the warmest terms of praise as 'grant translateur, noble Geoffroy Chaucier!' But it is to the Canterbury Tales that Chaucer owes his fame and rank as the fist poet of modern English literature, and in this work—the result of years of labour and study—the genius and power of the poet are most strongly expressed.

The Canterbury Tales are a collection of stories related by certain pilgrims who rode together in true English fellowship to worship and pay their vows at the shrine of the 'holy and blisful (blessed) martyr' Thomas à Becket.

The first hint of thus joining together a number of stories by one common bond was probably borrowed from Boccaccio's Decameron; 'but Chaucer's plan was better than that of the Decameron, and looked to a much greater result. ... Boccaccio, who died twenty-five years before Chaucer, placed the scene of his Decameron in a garden, to which seven fashionable ladies had retired with three fashionable gentlemen, during the plague that devastated Florence in 1348. The persons were all of the same class, young and rich, with no concern in life beyond the bandying of compliments. They shut themselves up in a delicious

* The chief minor works of Chaucer are:—The Romaunt of the Rose (a translation, now lost, of a portion of the Roman de la Rose, a work in two parts, the first part, of 4,070 lines, by Guillaume de Lorris (1200–1230), and the Sequel, of 18,002 lines, by Jean de Meung, written nearly half a century later); The Assembly of Fowls, or the Parliament of Birds (?1382); Chaucer's A B C, translated out of Guillaume de Guilemyle's 'Pelerinage de l'Homme,' written about 1330; The Book of the Duchesse (1369); Troilus and Criseyde, an enlarged version of Boccaccio's Filostrato (?written 1380–83); The Complaint of Mars (?1374); The Complaint of Venus (translated from Gransson); The House of Fame (?1384); The Legend of Good Women (about 1385); Anelida and Arcite; and a prose Treatise on the Astrolabe (1391).

The Court of Love, Lydgate's Complaint of the Black Knight, The Cuckoo and the Nightingale, The Isle of Ladies or Chaucer's Dream, The Flower and the Leaf, the extant Romaunt of the Rose, are also usually ascribed to Chaucer, but Mr. Bradshaw holds that they bear internal evidence of not being the production of the author of the Canterbury Tales— for 'all these poems contravene the laws of rhyme observed by Chaucer in the works, both of youth and old age, that are certainly his.' (See Temporary Preface to the Six-Text Edition of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, ed. Furnivall, p. 108.) Hertzberg, Mr. Bradshaw, &c., have adduced good reasons for excluding The Testament of Love from the list of Chaucer's works.

h Mr. Wright thinks that the widespread Romance of the 'Seven Sages,' of which there are several English versions, gave Chaucer the idea of his plot.
garden of the sort common in courtly inventions of the middle ages, and were occupied in sitting about idly, telling stories to each other. The tales were usually dissolute, often witty, sometimes exquisitely poetical, and always told in simple charming prose. The purpose of the story-tellers was to help each other to forget the duties on which they had turned their backs, and stifle any sympathies they might have had for the terrible griefs of their friends and neighbours who were dying a few miles away. Chaucer substituted for the courtly Italian ladies and gentlemen who withdrew from fellowship with the world, as large a group as he could form of English people, of rank widely differing, in hearty human fellowship together. Instead of setting them down to lounge in a garden, he mounted them on horseback, set them on the high road, and gave them somewhere to go and something to do. The bond of fellowship was not fashionable acquaintance and a common selfishness. It was religion; not indeed in a form so solemn as to make laughter and jest unseemly, yet according to the custom of his day, a popular form of religion, the pilgrimage to the shrine of Thomas à Becket, into which men entered with much heartiness. It happened to be a custom which had one of the best uses of religion, in serving as a bond of fellowship in which conventional divisions of rank were for a time disregarded; partly because of the sense, more or less joined to religious exercise of any sort, that men are equal before God, and also, in no slight degree, because men of all ranks trotting upon the high road with chance companions, whom they might never see again, have been in all generations disposed to put off restraint, and enjoy such intercourse as might relieve the tediousness of travel.

It would take up too much space to enter upon any analysis of the several stories which make up this wonderful collection. It will suffice to consider briefly such portions of the Canterbury Tales as are included in this volume of Selections; and first in order and importance comes the Prologue, in which we have laid before us the general plan, and the several characters of the whole work.

In the pleasant season of April, as Chaucer lay at the Tabard, one of the chief houses of public entertainment, situated in the High-street of Southwark, nine-and-twenty pilgrims on their way to Canterbury arrived at the 'hostelry.' The poet, being on the same errand as themselves, joined them, and in a short time was on intimate and friendly terms with each member of the company. The host of the inn, 'Harry Bailly,' made one more, and presided over this 'merry company' during their journey to and from Canterbury. At his suggestion it was agreed that each pilgrim should tell two tales on their road to Becket's shrine, and two other tales on their way home; but as the number of the pilgrims was thirty-two\(^k\), and there are only twenty-four stories, it is clear that four-fifths of the tales are wanting, which may be accounted for by supposing that Chaucer died before the completion of his work, or even before he had settled upon the exact arrangement of the several tales, though the order of those he has left, and the probable stages of the journey to Canterbury, have been made out by Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Furnivall in the latter's Temporary Preface to the Six-Text Edition of Chaucer, Part i.

'After a brief introduction, filled with the most cheerful images of spring, the season of the pilgrimage, the poet commences the narrative with a description of the person and the character of each member of the party. This description extends to about seven hundred lines, and of course affords space for a very spirited and graphic portrayal of the physical aspect, and an outline of the moral features of each. This latter part of the description is generally more rapidly sketched, because it was a part of the author's plan to allow his personages to bring out their special traits of character, and thus to depict and individualise themselves, in the interludes between the tales. The selection of the pilgrims is evidently made with reference to this object of development in action, and therefore constitutes an essential feature of the plot. We have persons of all the ranks not too far removed from each other by artificial distinctions to be supposed capable of associating upon that footing of temporary equality which is the law of good fellowship, among travellers bound on the same journey and accidentally brought together.

\(^1\) Elsewhere a date is given, the 18th of April, being, probably, the second day of the pilgrimage; see Introd. to Prior. Tale, p. xi.

All the great classes of English humanity are thus represented, and opportunity is given for the display of the harmonies and the jealousies which now united, now divided, the interests of different orders and different vocations in the commonwealth.
The clerical pilgrims, it will be observed, are proportionately very numerous. The exposure of the corruptions of the Church was doubtless a leading aim with the poet; and if the whole series, which was designed to extend to at least 58 [128] tales, had been completed, the criminations and recriminations of the jealous ecclesiastics would have exhibited the whole profession in an unenviable light.

'But Chaucer could be just as well as severe. His portrait of the prioress, though it does not spare the affectations of the lady, is complimentary; and his "good man of religion," the "pore Persoun of a toun," of whom it is said that—"Cristes lore, and his apostles twelve,

He taughte, but first he folwed it himselfe," has been hundreds of times quoted as one of the most beautiful pictures of charity, humility, and generous, conscientious, intelligent devotion to the duties of the clerical calling, which can be found in the whole range of English literature.

'None of these sketches, I believe, has ever been traced to a foreign source; and they are so thoroughly national, that it is hardly possible to suppose that any imagination but that of an Englishman could have conceived them. In the first introduction of the individuals described in the prologies to the several stories, and in the dialogues which occur at the pauses between the tales, wherever, in short, the narrators appear in their own persons, the characters are as well marked and discriminated, and as harmonious and consistent in action, as in the best comedies of modern times. Although, therefore, there is in the plan of the composition nothing of technical dramatic form or incident, yet the admirable conception of character, the consummate skill with which each is sustained and developed, and the nature, life, and spirit of the dialogue, abundantly prove that if the drama had been known in Chaucer's time as a branch of living literature, he might have attained to as high excellence in comedy as any English or continental writer. The story of a comedy is but a contrivance to bring the characters into contact and relation with each other, and the invention of a suitable plot is a matter altogether too simple to have created the slightest difficulty to a mind like Chaucer's. He is essentially a dramatist; and if his great work does not appear in the conventional dramatic form, it is an accident of the time, and by no means proves a want of power of original conception or of artistic skill in the author.

'This is a point of interest in the history of modern literature, because it is probably the first instance of the exhibition of unquestionable dramatic genius in either the Gothic or the Romance languages. I do not mean that there had previously existed in modern Europe nothing like histrionic representation of real or imaginary events; but neither the Decameron of Boccaccio, to which the Canterbury Tales have been compared, nor any of the Mysteries and Moralities, or other imaginative works of the middle ages, in which several personages are introduced, show any such power of conceiving and sustaining individual character as to prove that its author could have furnished the personnel of a respectable play. Chaucer therefore may fairly be said to be not only the earliest dramatic genius of modern Europe, but to have been a dramatist before that which is technically known as the existing drama was invented m.

'The Knightes Tale, or at least a poem, upon the same subject, was originally composed by Chaucer as a separate work. As such, it is mentioned by him, among some of his other works, in the Legende of Goode Women (ll. 420, 1), under the title of "Al the love of Palamon and Arcyte Of Thebes, thogh the storye ys knowne lyte;" and the last words [copied from Boccaccio] seem to imply that it [the old story] had not made itself very popular. It is not impossible that at first it was a mere translation of the Teseide of Boccaccio, and that its present form was given it when Chaucer determined to assign it the first place among his Canterbury Tales n.

'It may not be unpleasing to the reader to see a short summary of it, which will show with what skill Chaucer has proceeded in reducing a poem of about ten thousand lines to a little more than two thousand without omitting any material circumstance.

'The Teseide is distributed into twelve Books or Cantos.

'Bk. i. Contains the war of Theseus with the Amazons, their submission to him, and his marriage with Hippolyta.

'Bk. ii. Theseus, having spent two years in Scythia, is reproached by Perithous in a vision, and immediately returns to n 'The Knight's Tale is an abridged translation of a part of Boccaccio's Teseide, but with considerable change in the plan, which is, perhaps, not much improved, and with important additions in the descriptive and the more imaginative portions of the story. These additions are not inferior to the finest parts of Boccaccio's work; and one of them, the description of the Temple of Mars, is particularly interesting, as proving that Chaucer possessed a power of treating the grand and terrible, of which no modern poet but Dante had yet given an example.' (Marsh, Origin and History of the English Language, pp. 423, 424.) 'Out of 2,250 of Chaucer's lines, he has only translated 270 (less than one-eighth) from Boccaccio; only 374 more lines bear a general likeness to Boccaccio; and only 132 more a slight likeness.' (Furnivall, Temporary Preface to Six-Text Edition of Chaucer.)

'Several parallel lines between Chaucer's Troilus and the Knightes Tale show that Troilus and the original draught of the Knightes Tale, to which Chaucer himself gives the name of "Palemon," were in hand at about the same time.' (Skeat, in Notes and Queries, Fourth Series, iv. 292.)
Athens with Hippolyta and her sister Emilia. He enters the city in triumph; finds the Grecian ladies in the temple of Clemenzia; marches to Thebes; kills Creon, &c., and brings home Palemone and Arcita who are "Damnati—ad eterna presone."

'Bk. iii. Emilia, walking in a garden and singing, is heard and seen first by Arcita ⁰, who calls Palemone. They are both equally enamoured of her, but without any jealousy or rivalship. Emilia is supposed to see them at the window, and to be not displeased with their admiration. Arcita is released at the request of Perithous; takes his leave of Palemone, with embraces, &c.

'Bk. iv. Arcita, having changed his name to Pentheo, goes into the service of Menelaus at Mycenae, and afterwards of Peleus at Aegina. From thence he returns to Athens and becomes a favourite servant of Theseus, being known to Emilia, though to nobody else; till after some time he is overheard making his complaint in a wood, to which he usually resorted for that purpose, by Pamphilo, a servant of Palemone.

'Bk. v. Upon the report of Pamphilo, Palemone begins to be jealous of Arcita, and is desirous to get out of prison in order to fight with him. This he accomplishes with the assistance of Pamphilo, by changing clothes with Alimeto, a physician. He goes armed to the wood in quest of Arcita, whom he finds sleeping. At first, they are very civil and friendly to each other. Then Palemone calls upon Arcita to renounce his pretensions to Emilia, or to fight with him. After many long expostulations on the part of Arcita, they fight, and are discovered first by Emilia, who sends for Theseus. When he finds who they are, and the ⁰ 'In describing the commencement of this amour, which is to be the subject of the remainder of the poem, Chaucer has entirely departed from his author in three principal circumstances, and, I think, in each with very good reason: (1) By supposing Emilia to be seen first by Palamon, he gives him an advantage over his rival which makes the catastrophe more consonant to poetical justice; (2) The picture which Boccaccio has exhibited of two young princes violently enamoured of the same object, without jealousy or rivalship, if not absolutely unnatural, is certainly very insipid and unpoetical; (3) As no consequence is to follow from their being seen by Emilia at this time, it is better, I think, to suppose, as Chaucer has done, that they are not seen by her.'—Tyrwhitt.

cause of their difference, he forgives them, and proposes the method of deciding their claim to Emilia by a combat of a hundred on each side, to which they gladly agree.

'Bk. vi. Palemone and Arcita live splendidly at Athens, and send out messengers to summon their friends, who arrive; and the principal of them are severally described, viz. Lycurgus, Peleus, Phocus, Telamon, &c.; Agamemnon, Menelaus, Castor and Pollux, &c.; Nestor, Evander, Perithous, Ulysses, Diomedes, &c.; with a great display of ancient history and mythology.

'Bk. vii. Theseus declares the laws of the combat, and the two parties of a hundred on each side are formed. The day before the combat, Arcita, after having visited the temples of all the gods, makes a formal prayer to Mars. The prayer, being personified, is said to go and find Mars in his Temple in Thrace, which is described; and Mars, upon understanding the message, causes favourable signs to be given to Arcita. In the same manner Palemone closes his religious observances with a prayer to Venus. His prayer being also personified, sets out for the temple of Venus on Mount Citherone, which is also described; and the petition is granted. Then the sacrifice of Emilia to Diana is described, her prayer, the appearance of the goddess, and the signs of the two fires. In the morning they proceed to the theatre with their respective troops, and prepare for the action. Arcita puts up a private prayer to Emilia, and harangues his troop publicly, and Palemone does the same.

'Bk. viii. Contains a description of the battle, in which Palemone is taken prisoner.

'Bk. ix. The horse of Arcita, being frightened by a Fury, sent from Hell at the desire of Venus, throws him. However, he is carried to Athens in a triumphal chariot with Emilia by his side; is put to bed dangerously ill; and there by his own desire espouses Emilia.

'Bk. x. The funeral of the persons killed in the combat. Arcita, being given over by his physicians, makes his will, in discourse with Theseus, and desires that Palemone may inherit all his possessions and also Emilia. He then takes leave of Palemone and Emilia, to whom he repeats the same request. Their lamentations. Arcita orders a sacrifice to Mercury, which Palemone performs for him, and dies.

'Bk. xi. Opens with the passage of Arcita's soul to heaven, imitated from the Ninth Book of Lucan. The funeral of Arcita.
Description of the wood felled takes up six stanzas. Palemone builds a temple in honour of him, in which his whole history is painted. The description of this painting is an abridgment of the preceding part of the poem.

'Bk. xii. Theseus proposes to carry into execution Arcita's will by the marriage of Palemone and Emilia. This they both decline for some time in formal speeches, but at last are persuaded and married. The kings, &c. take their leave, and Palemone remains—in gioia e in diporto con la sua dona nobile e cortese."

The Nonne Prestes Tale is so characteristic of Chaucer's genius, that Dryden, who modernised it as the fable of the 'Cock and Fox,' thought it to be of the poet's own invention; but it is no doubt taken from a fable of about forty lines, 'Dou Coc et dou Werpl,' in the poems of Marie of France, which is amplified in the fifth chapter of the old French metrical Roman de Renart, entitled 'Si comme Renart prist Chantecler le Coc.' See p. liii.

Chaucer's English, like that of the present day, is an uninflected or analytic language, and in this respect it differed from the language of many earlier authors, and especially from that oldest form of English usually termed Anglo-Saxon, which was originally inflected or synthetic, that is to say, it expressed grammatical relation by a change in the form of words, instead of employing auxiliary words. The circumstances which led to this conversion are well known, forming as they do a part of the history of the English people. The first in order of time is the invasion, settlement, and conquest of the country by the Danes, extending over a period of nearly a century and a half (A.D. 867–1013).
The Danish influence upon the language seems to have affected chiefly the dialects of the north and east parts of the island, in consequence of which their inflexions and syntactical structure were much simplified, and they assumed a more modern appearance than the speech prevailing in other districts. Doubtless it caused the language generally to be in a very unsettled state, and the revolution thus commenced was accelerated by the Norman Conquest, which followed in the year 1066. Norman rule introduced a new civilization of a far higher order than had ever before existed in England, and of this the Normans were fully sensible, and utterly despised both the language and literature of the Saxons as only fit for churls and villains. In a certain sense English ceased to be the language of literature, and for about two hundred years Norman-French was the language of the Court, the Church, the Courts of Law, and of the upper and middle classes of society, and divided literature with the Latin tongue. But though the English were thus made to feel their position as a subject people, they clung most pertinaciously to the speech of their forefathers, and after a long and continuous struggle English regained its supremacy as the language of literature and the common tongue of all who claimed the name of Englishmen, while Norman-French was reduced to a mere provincial dialect. This was brought about by the fusion of the Saxon and Norman races, about the time of Henry II; by the severance of Normandy from England and its annexation to France, in the time of John; by the wars of Edward III, which did much to promote religious and political liberty, and by the adoption of English as the household speech by that part of the nation that had previously spoken French, which happened about the middle of the fourteenth century.

The Norman Conquest wrought a twofold revolution in the language: the first, which extended over nearly the whole of n It is altogether erroneous to suppose that immediately after the Norman Conquest English ceased to be written, for from Ælfric to Chaucer we have an almost unbroken series of vernacular literature by which we are able to determine with tolerable exactness the various changes in grammar and vocabulary which occurred during this interval.

the twelfth century, affected the grammatical forms of the language; final vowels were changed, some consonants became softened, and many of the older inflexions of nouns, adjectives and verbs went out of use, their place being supplied by prepositions and auxiliary words. This was a period of great grammatical confusion, but the vocabulary remained unchanged. At the beginning of the thirteenth century, we find the grammatical forms more settled; but many provincial elements unknown to the oldest English had crept in, and about the middle of this period we have to note a further change in the substance of the language, caused by the infusion of the Norman-French element. The additions to the vocabulary were at first small, but they gradually increased, and about the middle of the fourteenth century they formed no inconsiderable part of the written language. In Chaucer's works these loans are so numerous that he has been accused of corrupting the English language by a large and unnecessary admixture of Norman-French terms. But Chaucer, with few exceptions, employed only such terms as were in use in the spoken language, and stamped them with the impress of his genius, so that they became current coin of the literary realm.

The period in which Chaucer lived was one of great literary activity, and such names as Richard Rolle of Hampole, Minot, Mandeville, Langland, Wiccliffe, and Gower, prove that the English language was in a healthy and vigorous condition, and really deserving of the importance into which it was rising. But as yet there was no national language, and consequently no national literature; the English of the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth centuries diverged into many dialects, each having its own literature intelligible only to a comparatively small circle of readers, and no one form of English can be considered as the type of the language of the period. Of these dialects the East Midland, spoken, with some variation, from the Humber to the Thames, was perhaps the simplest in its grammatical structure, the most free from those broad provincialisms which particularised the speech of other districts, and presented the nearest approach in form and substance to the language of the present day as spoken and written by educated Englishmen. In the works of Ormin and Robert of Brunne we have evidence of its great capacity for literary purposes. Wicliffe and Gower added considerably to its importance, but in the hands of Chaucer it attained to the dignity of a national language. He represented, and identified himself with, that new life which the English people at this time were just commencing, and his works reflect not only his own inimitable genius, but the spirit, tastes, and feelings of his age. It was this, combined with his thorough mastery over the English language, that caused Chaucer to become to others (what no one had been before) a standard of literary excellence; and for two hundred years after he had no equal, but was regarded as the father of English poetry, the Homer of his country, and the well of English undefiled.

With the Canterbury Tales commences the modern period of English literature. Our earlier authors are usually studied for their philological importance, and most of them require the aid of a grammar and a glossary, but Chaucer is as easily understood as Spenser and Shakespeare. Not many of his terms are wholly obsolete, and but few of his inflections have gone wholly out of use. But as some special acquaintance with Chaucer’s English will be of great service in mastering the poet’s system of versification, an outline of his grammatical forms (for the most part taken from Prof. F. J. Child’s Essay on Chaucer) is here subjoined, which will be found useful should

NOUNS.

Number.—The plural for the most part terminates in -es:

'And with his stremës dryeth in the grevës
The silver dropës hanging on the levës.'

(Knightes Tale, ll. 637-8.)

1. -s is frequently added, (a) to nouns terminating in a liquid or dental, as bargayns, naciouns, palmers, pilgryms, &c.; (b) to most words of more than one syllable.

In some MSS. we find -is, -us, for -es—as bestis, beasts; leggus, legs; othus, oaths—which seem to be dialectical varieties, and probably due to the scribes who copied the MSS.

2. Some few nouns (originally forming the plural in -an) have -en, -n; as asschen, ashes; assen, asses; been, bees; eyen, yen, eyes; fleen, fleas; flon, arrows; oxen; ton, toon, toes; schoon, shoon, shoes.

The following have -n, which has been added to older forms—(a) in -e (originally in -u); (b) in -y.

(a) Brethren (A. S. brothru, O. E. brothre, brethre), brothers.
   Doughtren (A. S. dothru, O. E. dohtre), daughters.
   Sistren, sustren (A. S. svuste, O. E. svustre), sisters.
   Children (A. S. cildru, O. E. childre), children.
(b) Kyn (A. S. cŷ), kine. Add fon, foon (A. S. fûn), foes.

3. The following nouns, originally neuter, have no termination in the plural:—deer, folk, good, hors, neet, scheep, swin, thing, yer, yeer; as in the older stages of the language night, winter, freond (A. S. frýnd) are used as plurals.

4. Feet, gees, men, teeth, are examples of the plural by vowel-change.

t In some of the O. E. Northern and Midland dialects we find brether (brothers), childer (children), deghter (daughters).

u In some of the Northern and Midland dialects we find kye (cows).
Case.—The genitive case singular ends in -ës; as—

'Ful worthy was he in his lordës werre.' (Prok. l. 47.)

1. In Anglo-Saxon, fëder, bróthor, dohtor, took no inflexion in the genitive singular: this explains such phrases as 'fader day,' 'fader soule,' 'brother sone,' 'daughter name.'

2. The following phrases contain remnants of feminine nouns which originally formed the genitive in -an (first declension of A. S. nouns):—'Lady (=ladyë) grace; ' 'lady veyl; ' 'cherchë blood; ' 'hertë blood; ' 'widow (=widewë) sone; ' 'sonnë upriste' (uprising).

3. The dative case singular occasionally occurs and terminates in -e; as beddë, holtë, &c.

4. The genitive plural is much the same as in modern English; as 'foxës tales; ' 'mennës wittes.' Forms in -en (= -ene) are not common in Chaucer's works: 'his eyghen (of eyes) sight' occurs in Canterbury Tales, l. 10134 (Wright's Text).

ADJECTIVES.

Adjectives, like the modern German, have two forms—Definite and Indefinite. The definite form is preceded by the definite article, a demonstrative adjective, or a possessive pronoun, and terminates in -ë in all cases of the singular; as 'the yong-e sone,' 'his half-e cours.' Words of more than one syllable nearly always omit the final -e.

The vocative case of the adjective takes this -e; as 'lev-e brother' (l. 326, p. 42); 'O strong-e God' (l. 1515, p. 81).

Degrees of Comparison.—The Comparative degree is formed by adding -er (-re) to the Positive; as lever, gretterx.

We find some few forms in -re remaining; as derre (dearer); more (mare); ferre (further); herre (higher); nerre, ner (nearer); sorre (sorer).

Leng, lenger (lengre), = longer; stronger, = stronger, are x Occasionally the definite form of the comparative seems to end in -ere (-re), to distinguish it from the indefinite form in -er; but no positive rule can be laid down, as -er and -re are easily interchanged.

examples of vowel-change; as seen in the modern English elder, the comparative of old.

Bet (betré) and mo are contracted forms.

The Superlative degree terminates in -este (-est)v: nest or next, and hext (highest) are abbreviated forms.

Number.—The plural of adjectives is denoted by the final -e:—

'And smalè fowles maken melodye.' (Prol. l. 9.)

Adjectives of more than one syllable, and adjectives used predicatively, mostly drop the -e in the plural. Some few adjectives of Romance origin form the plural in -es; as 'places delitables.'

DEMONSTRATIVES.

1. The old plural tho (A.S. thó) of the definite article is still used by Chaucer, but the uninflected the is more frequently used.

In the phrases 'that oon,' 'that other'—which in some dialects became the toon (ton), the tother—that is the old form of the neuter article; but Chaucer never uses that except as a demonstrative adjective, as in the present stage of the language.

2. Atte=at the (A.S. æt thám; O.E. at than, attan, atta, masc. and neut.); the feminine would be attér (O.E.), æt þérer (A.S.).

3. Tho must be rendered those, as well as the; as 'tho wordes,' 'and tho were bent.' It is occasionally used pronominally, as 'oon of tho that,' one of those that.

4. This has for its plural thise, thes, these (A.S. thás, thés). In some MSS. this occurs for thise.

5. Thilké (A.S. thyllic, thylc=the like; O.E. thellich, pl. thelliche), the like, that.

6. That ilké, that same (A.S. ylc, same; y is a remnant of an old demonstrative base; -lc=lic=like).

7. Som . . . som=one . . . another.

'He moot ben deed, the king as shal a page;
Som in his bed, som in the depé see,
Som in the largé feeld, as men may se.'

(Knightes Tale, ll. 2172-4.)

v The superlatives of adverbs always seem to end in -est, and not in -este; cp. p. 76, ll. 1340, 1349, with ll. 1342, 1343, 1344, 1345.

1. The Independent forms of the pronouns, which are also used predicatively, are min (pl. mine) ; oure, oures, ours ; thin (pl. thine) ; youre, youres, yours ; hire, heres, hers ; here, heres, theirs.

2. The Midland dialect seems to have borrowed the forms oures, youres, &c., from the Northern dialect, in which oure, youre, &c., are not used.

3. The dative cases of the pronouns are used after wel, wo, loth, leef (lief); with impersonal verbs, as 'me mette,' 'him thoughte'; and with some verbs of motion, as 'goth him,' 'he rydeth him.'

4. The pronoun thow is sometimes joined to the verb, as schaltow, willow.

5. The Interrogative pronouns are who (gen. whos; dat. and acc. whom), which and what.

(a) Which has often the sense of what, what sort of:

'Which a miracle ther bifel anoon.'

(Knightes Tale, 1817; see Prol. l. 4o.)

C 2
It is not used exactly as a relative, as in modern English, but is joined with that; as ‘Hem whiche that wepith;’ ‘His love the which that he oweth.’

(b) What is occasionally used for why (cp. Lat. quid, Ger. was):—

‘What sholde he studie and make himselven wood?’ (Prol. l. 184.)

‘What sholde I alday of his wo endyte?’ (Knightes Tale, l. 522.)

6. That is a relative pronoun, but it is often used with the personal pronouns, in the following manner:—

(a) That he = who.

‘A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,

That fro the tymé that he first began

To ryden out; he loved chivalrye.’ (Prol. ll. 43–45.)

(b) That his = whose.

‘Al were they sore y-hurt, and namely oon,

That with a spere was thirled his brest-boon.’ (Knightes Tale, ll. 1851–52.)

(c) That him = whom.

‘I saugh to-day a corps yborn to chirche

That now on Monday last I saugh him wircbe.’ (Milleres Tale, l. 243.)

This construction occurs in A.S. writers: Cp. That naes na eówres hances ac thurh God, þe ic þurh HIS willan hider ásend was = that was not of your own accord but through God, through whose will I was sent hither. (Gen. xlv. 8.)

7. The words who and who so are used indefinitely; as, ‘As who seith’ = as one says; ‘Who so that can him rede’ (Prol. l. 741) = if that any one can read him.

8. Me and men are used like the French on, English one.

Me, which must be distinguished from the dative me, was in use as an indefinite pronoun much later than is usually considered by English grammarians:—

‘And stop me (=let any one stop) his dice, you are a villaine.’ (Lodge, ‘Wits Miserie.’)

1. In some manuscripts the \( t \) of the 2nd person sing. present tense is sometimes dropped, as in the Harl. MS. \( dos = dost, has = hast \). This has been considered by some as a mere clerical error; but in the East Midland dialects, there was a tendency to drop the \( t \), probably arising from the circumstance of the 2nd person of the verb in the Northumbrian dialects terminating always in -es.

2. Verbs of Saxon origin, which have \( d \) or \( t \) for the last letter of the root (and one or two that have \( s \)), sometimes keep the contracted form in the 3rd sing. as \( sit = sitteth, \) sits; \( writ = writeth, \) writes; \( finit = findeth, \) finds; \( halt = holdeth, \) holds; \( rist = riseth, \) rises; \( stont = stondeth = stands \).

3. We often find -th instead of -eth, as \( spekth = speaketh \) a.

4. In some MSS. of the Cant. Tales, the plural of the present indicative occasionally ends in -eth (-th), which was the a In this edition I have often given the full form of the preterite in -ede, although the MSS. mostly write -ed; but in the best MS. of Chaucer's prose translation of Boethius the preterite ends in ede (-ed, -te), very seldom in -ed (-d, -t). Either the medial or the final e was frequently dropped.

ordinary inflexion for all persons in the Old English Southern dialects.

‘And over his heed ther schyneth two figures.’
(Knightes Tale, l. 1185, Harl. MS.)

II. STRONG VERBS.

1. These verbs have a change of vowel in the past tense, and the past participle ends in -en or -ē; as sterven, to die; pret. starf; p.p. storven or storve. (See Participles, p. xxxix. 3.)

2. Some few strong verbs take the inflexions of the weak verbs, so that we have double forms for the past tense, as—

Slepen, sleep, slep, and slep-te.
Crepen, creep, crep, and crep-te.
Wepen, weep, wep, and wep-te.
3. The 1st and 3rd persons of the past indicative of strong verbs do not take an -e in the singular number; the addition of this syllable turns them into plurals. Cf. 6 (below.)

4. The East Midland dialect, in the Early English period, dropped the -e in the 2nd person past indicative; and we find in Chaucer 'thou bar,' 'thou spak,' 'thou dronk' (O. E. thou her-e, thou spek-e, thou drunk-e), = thou barest, thou spakest, thou drankest. But these forms may be due merely to the scribes. Occasionally we find -est, as in modern English; as bygonnest, knewest, &c.

5. The plural indicative ends in -en or -e.

6. Some few verbs, as in the older stages of the language, have a change of vowel in the past tense plural, as—

Subjunctive Mood.

1. The present subjunctive, singular number, terminates in -e, the plural in -en; the past (of weak verbs) in -ede, -de, -te, the plural in -eden, -den, -ten, through all persons.

2. Such forms as speke we, go we, = let us speak, let us go.

Imperative Mood.

1. Verbs conjugated like loven and tellen have the 2nd person sing. imperative in -e; as love thou, telle thou. All other verbs have properly no final e, as 'her thou' = hear thou, 'ches thou' = choose thou.

2. The plural terminates usually in -eth, but sometimes the -th is dropped.

Infinitive Mood.

The infinitive ends in -en or -e; as speken, speke, to speak. The -n was dropped at a very early period in the Southern English dialect of the fourteenth century, and -e is preferred to -en.
INTRODUCTION.

The gerundial infinitive, or dative case of the infinitive (preceded by to), occasionally occurs, as to doon-e (=to don-ne), to sen-e (=to sen-ne), to do, to see. (See Kn. Ta. 177.)

PARTICIPLES.

1. The present participle ends usually in -ing. The A. S. suffix was -ende, which is used by Gower; but in the Southern dialect of Early English we find -inde, which has evidently given rise to -inge, of which -ing is a shorter form; but the longer -inge is occasionally employed by Chaucer, to rhyme with an infinitive verb in -e.

The suffix -ing, of nouns like morning, was -ung in the older stages of the language.

2. The past participle of weak verbs terminates in -ed, -d, and occasionally in -et, -t; that of strong verbs in -en or -e.

3. The prefix y- or i- (A. S. ge-) occurs frequently before the past participle, as y-ronne (run), i-falle (fallen), &c.

ANOMALOUS VERBS.

1. Ben, been, to be:—1st sing. pres. indic. am; 2nd art; 3rd beth, is; pl. been, ben, aren, are; past, 1st and 3rd was; 2nd were. Imperative pl. beth; p.p. been, ben.

2. Conne, to know, be able:—pres. indic., 1st and 3rd can; 2nd can, canst; pl. connen, conne; past, 1st and 3rd couthe, couthe, coude; p.p. couthe, coud.

3. Daren, dare:—pres. indic. sing., 1st and 3rd dar; 2nd darst; pl. dar, dorre; past dorste, durste.

4. May:—pres. indic. sing., 1st and 3rd mow, may; 2nd mayst, maist, might; pl. move, mowen; pres. subjunctive move; past tense, 1st and 3rd mighte, moghte, 2nd mightest (Kn. Ta. 797).

5. Mot, must, may:—indic. pres. sing., 1st and 3rd mot, moot; 2nd must, moot; pl. mooten, moote; past moste.

b The Northern form of the participle was -ande, -and, which occasionally occurs in the Romaunt of the Rose, as lepand, leaping. The East Midland dialect had the double forms -end and -and.
6. Owen, to owe (debo) — pres. oweth; past oghte, oughte, aughte; pl. oghten, oughten, oughte.

7. Shal, schal, shall — pres. indic. sing., 1st and 3rd shal; 2nd shalt; pl. shullen, shuln, shul; past shulde, soldé. (Also schal, &c.)

10. Wil, will — pres. indic. sing., 1st wil, wol = wille, wolle; 2nd wilt, wolt; 3rd wilie, wole, wol; pl. woln, wille, willen; past wolde.

NEGATIVE VERBS.

Nam, nis, = am not, is not; nas, nere, = was not, were not; nath = hath not; nadde, nad, = had not; nille, nil = will not; nolde = would not; nat, not, noot = knows not; nost = knowest not; miste, nisten, = knew not.

ADVERBS.

1. Adverbs are formed from adjectives by adding -e to the positive degree; as brighte, brightly; deepe, deeply; lowe, lowly.

2. Some few adverbs have e before ly, as boldely, needely, softely, semely, trewey.

3. Adverbs in -en and -e: — abouen, aboue; abouten, aboute; biforn, biforn; siththen, siththe (since); withouten, withoute. Many have dropped the form in -n; as asondre, behynde, bynethe, bytwene, byyonde; henne (hence), thenne (thence).

4. Adverbs in -e: — ofte, selde (seldom), sone, soone (soon), twie (twice), thrie (thrice).

5. Adverbs in -es: — needes (A. S. néade), needs; ones (A. S. Æne), once; twies (A. S. twiwa), twice; thries (A. S. thrīwa), thrice.

   (a) -es for -e, -an or -a: — unnethes (A. S. unēathe), scarcely; whiles (A. S. hwile), whilst; bysides (A. S. besidan); togideres (A. S. to-gædere).
INTRODUCTION.

(b) -es for -e or -en:—hennes (A. S. heonan); thennes (A. S. thanon); whennes (A. S. hwanon); hence, thence, whence.

(c) -es = -st:—agaynes, ayens (A. S. ongéan), against; amonges (A. S. gemang), amongst; amyddes (A. S. on middan, ámiddan), amidst.

6. Of-newe, newly (cp. of yore, of late), recently; as-now, at present; on slepe, asleep (cp. on honting, a hunting, &c.).

7. Negative Adverbs. Two or more negatives (more common than one in Chaucer) do not make an affirmative.

'He nevere yet no vileinye ne sayde,
In al his lyf, unto no maner wight.' (Prol. ll. 70, 71.)

But (only) takes a negative before it; as, 'I nam but deed.' (Knightes Tale, l. 416.)

8. As, used before in, to, for, by, of, = considering, with respect to, so far as concerns. See Prol. l. 87.

As is used before the imperative mood in supplicatory phrases.

See Knightes Tale, ll. 1444, 1459.

9. Ther, tho, occasionally signify where, when.

PREPOSITIONS.

Occasionally til = to, unto = until, up = upon, up-on = on.

CONJUNCTIONS.

Ne . . . ne = neither . . . nor; other = or; other . . . other = either . . . or; what . . . and = both . . . and e.

METRE AND VERSIFICATION.

1. Except the Tale of Melibius and the Persones Tale, the Canterbury Tales are written in rhyming verse; but this system of versification did not come into general use in England until after the Norman Conquest. The poetry of the Anglo-Saxons, like that of the Scandinavian and old Germanic races, e For a more detailed account of Chaucer’s grammar, see Professor Child’s Essay on Chaucer, from which I have derived much assistance. was rhythmical and alliterative. Their poems are written in couplets, in such a manner that in each couplet there are three (or two) emphatic syllables, two (or one) in the first line and one in the second, commencing with the same letter; and this letter is also the initial of the chief emphatic syllable in the second line.

'Ge/ic wæs he tham leochtum steorrum, lof sceolde he drihtnes wyrcean, dyran sceolde he his dreamas on heofonum, and sceolde his drihtne thancian thæs leanes the he him on tham leohte gescerede, thonne lete he his hine lange wealdan:
ac he awende hit him to wyrsan thinge, ongan him winn up-ahebban with thone hehstan heofnes wealdend, the siteth on thæm halgan stoled.'

(Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 17, ll. 7-16.)

Langland's Vision of Piers Ploughman, partly written in 1362, presents all the peculiarities of this form of verse:—

'I was weori of wandringe,
And wente me to reste
Undur a brod banke
Bi a bourne syde;
And as I lay and leonede
And lokede on the watres,
I slumberde in a slepyng,
Hit sownede so murie.' (ll. 7-10, A-text.)

In the North and West of England alliteration was employed as late as the end of the fifteenth century, but it appears to have gone out of use in the Southern and Eastern parts of the country, which early in the thirteenth century adopted the classical and Romance forms of versification.

\[\text{d Like was he (Satan) to the Æight stars;}
\[\text{The laud (praise) of the Ruler ought he to have wrought,}
\]
\[\text{Dear should he hold his delights (joys) in heaven,}
\]
\[\text{And thank should he his Director (Lord)}
\[\text{For the loan (gift) he had bestowed on him in that Æight (heaven),}
\]
\[\text{Then would he have let him long possess it;}
\]
\[\text{But he did wend (turn) it for himself to a worse purpose,}
\]
\[\text{Began, for his part, to raise up war}
\[\text{Against the Æighest Ruler of heaven}
\[\text{Who sitteth on the holy stool (seat).}\]
2. The greater part of the Canterbury Tales is written in heroic couplets, or lines containing five accents. In this metre we have ten syllables; but we often find eleven, and occasionally nine. Of these variations the former is obtained by the addition of an unaccented syllable at the end of a line.®

'Him wolde he snib ben sharp ly for the nones.
A bet tre preest I trowe that no wher non is.'

(Pro. ll. 523-4.)

'Th' answere of this I le tē to divynis,
But wel I woot that in this world gret pyne is.'

(Knights Tale, ll. 465-6.)

So in lines 1 and 2 of the Prologue:

'Whan that April lē with his shou res soote
The droght of Marche hath per ced to the rootē.'

In the second variation, the first foot consists of a single accented syllable. See Pro. 170, 247, 294, 371, 391; Kn. Ta. 156, 324, 368, 652, 677, 1072, 1073, 1171, 1172, 1269, 1631, 1653, 1855, 1979, 1996, 2094. E. g. :

'Now it shyneth, now it reyneth fastē.' (Knightes Tale, l. 677.)

3. Chaucer frequently contracts two syllables into one; as nam, vis, nath, nadde=ne am, ne is, ne hath, ne hadde, am not, is not, hath not, had not; thasse, theffect, tabide=the ass, the effect, to abide, &c. In Troilus and Criseyde we find ny=ne I, not I, nor I; mathinketh=me athinketh, it seems to me. But this contraction is not always so expressed in writing, though observed in reading:

'And cer tes lord to aby den your presencē.'

(Knights Tale, l. 69.)

'By eter ne word to dy en in prisoun.' (Ib. l. 251.)

4. The syllables -en, -er, -eth, -el, -ow (-we, -ewe), are often said to be contracted, but properly speaking they are slurred over and nearly, but not quite, absorbed by the syllable preceding:
CHAUCER’S METRE.

'Weren of | his bit | tre sal | tê te | res wetê.'
(Knightes Tale, l. 422; see l. 2034.)

'And though | that I | no wepne | have in | this place.' (Ib. l. 733.)

'Thou shol | dest nevere | out of | this gro | ve pace.' (Ib. l. 744.)

With these compare the following:—

'And forth | we riden | a li | tel more | than pas.' (Prol. l. 825.)

'And won | derly | delivere, | and greet | of strengthe.' (Ib. l. 84.)

'As a | ny ra | venes fether | it shoon | for-blak.' (Kn. Ta. l. 1286.)

'I noot | whether she | be wom | man or | goddesse.' (Ib. l. 243.)

'And thinketh | heer cometh | my mor | tel e | nemy.' (Ib. l. 785.)

'She ga | dereth flou | res par | ty whyte | and rede.' (Ib. l. 195.)

'Thus hath | this widwe | hir li | tel sone | y-taught.' (Prioresses Tale; Group B, l. 1699.)

'A man | to light | a candel | at his | lanterne.' (Cant. Tales, l. 5916, Wright’s edition.)

5. Many words of French origin ending in -ance (-aunce, -ence), -eun, -ie (-ye), -er (-ere), -age, -une, -ure, are often accented on the final syllable (not counting the final -e), but at other times the accent is thrown further back, as in modern English: e.g. bataille and bataille; fortûne and fortûne, &c.

So also many nouns of A. S. origin, in -ing (-inge, -ynge), as hûnting and hunting. (See Knightes Tale, ll. 821, 1450.)

6. Many nouns (of French origin) ending in -le, -re, were written, and probably pronounced, as in modern French; e.g. table, temple, miracle, obstacle, propre=tabl', templ', miracl', &c.

7. Final -es is a distinct syllable in—

(a) The genitive case singular of nouns; as ‘sowès eres’ (Prol. l. 556); ‘kingès court’ (Knightes Tale, l. 323).

(b) The plural of nouns (see Prol. ll. 1, 7, 9, &c.).

(c) Adverbs; as nonès, ellès, twyès.

† The spelling wher in the text represents whether; see footnote 3, p. 39.

g The forms of the present participle in M. E. ended in -inde (-ende, -ande), and many verbal nouns ended in -ung. These endings were gradually changed into the affix -ing, which represented both.
8. The -ed of past participles is generally sounded; as percëd, entunëd, pinchëd (Prol. II. 2, 123, 151).

9. The past tense of weak verbs ends in -de or -të; as wentë, coudë, woldë, bleddë, feddë, haddë (Prol. II. 78, 94, 144, 145, 146, 163).

A fuller form of the suffix is -ede; shortened occasionally to -de or to -ed'; as lovedë = lov'de (Prol. I. 97); whilst in l. 133 of Prologue we have wypted. In Troilus and Criseyde we often find shrightë and sightë written for shriketë and sighedë.

10. Final -en is for the most part a distinct syllable in—
   (a) The gerund or the infinitive mood; as to sekën, to wendën, yeven, makën (Prol. II. 13, 21, 487, 775).
   (b) Past participles of strong verbs; as holpen, spoken (Prol. II. 18, 31).
   (c) Present and past tenses plural of verbs; as makën, slepën, longën, werën (Prol. II. 9, 10, 12, 29); bisekën, makën, lostën (Knightes Tale, ll. 60, 77, 78).
   (d) Adverbs, prepositions, or conjunctions (originally ending in -on or -an); as withouten, sithën (Prol. 461, 538; Kn. Ta. 663).

11. Final -e. As the manuscripts of the Canterbury Tales are not always grammatically correct, an attention to the final e is of great importance. The following remarks will enable the reader to understand when and why it is employed.

   a. In nouns and adjectives (of A. S. origin) the final e represents one of the final vowels a, u, e; as asse, bane, cuppe=A. S. assa, bana, cuppa; herte, mere=A. S. heorte, mere; bale, care, wode=A. S. bealu, caru, wudu; dere, drye=A. S. déore, dryge, &c.

   b. The final e (unaccented) in words of French origin is sounded as in French verse (but it is also frequently silent); as—

   "Who springeth up for Ioyë but Arcite."
   (Knightes Tale, l. 1013.)

   "Ne wette hir finges in hir saucë depe." (Prol. I. 129.)
c. Final -e is a remnant of various grammatical inflexions:—

(1) It is a sign of the dative case in nouns; as roote, reste (Prol. ll. 2, 30).

f is often changed into v (written u in the MSS.) before e, as nom. wyf, lyf; dat. wyve, lyve (Kn. Ta. 1002).

bedde, brigge (bridge), &c., are the datives of bed, brig, &c.

(2) In adjectives it marks—

(a) The definite form of the adjective; as 'the yongé sonne' (Prol. l. 7).

(b) The plural of adjectives; as 'smalé fowles' (Prol. l. 9).

(c) The vocative case of adjectives; as 'O strongé god' (Knightes Tale, l. 1515).

(3) In verbs the final -e is a sign—

(a) Of the infinitive mood; as, ryde, wryté (Prol. ll. 27, 96).

(b) Of the gerundial infinitive. See Infinitive Mood, p. xxxix. See Kn. Ta. 177.

(c) Of the past participles of strong verbs; as yronné, yfalle (Prol. ll. 8, 25); dronké, knowé (Knightes Tale, ll. 404, 406, 1442).

(d) Of the past tense (attached to -ed, -d, or -t). See p. xlv, sect. 9.

(e) Of the subjunctive and optative moods. See Prol. ll. 131, 770.

(f) Of the imperative mood 3rd person (properly the 3rd person of the subjunctive mood). See Subjunctive Mood, p. xxxix, sect. 2.

(4) In adverbs the e is very common:—

(a) It represents an older vowel-ending; as, soné (soon), twyé, thryé (A. S. sóna, twíwa, thríwa).
(b) It distinguishes adverbs from adjectives; as fairé, righté = fairly, rightly (Prol. 94).

(c) It represents an -en; as abouté, above = E. E. abouten, abovén = A. S. abútan, abúfan.

(d) -e- is a distinct syllable in adverbs ending in -ely; as lustély, nedély, semély, trevély (Prol. 136).

On the other hand, the final e is often silent—

1. In the personal pronouns; as oure, youre, hire, here.
2. In many words of more than one syllable, and in words of Romance origin. Cf. p. xlv, § 6.

It is elided—

1. Before a word commencing with a vowel:
   'For I mot wepe and weylé whyl I live.' (Knightes Tale, l. 437.)
   'And in the grove at tyme and place yset.' (Ib. l. 777.)

2. Often before some few words beginning with h; as he, his, him, hem, hire, hath, hadde, have, how, her, heer:
   'Wel coude he dresse his takel yemanly.' (Prol. l. 106.)
   'Then wolde he wepe, he mightē nat be stent.'
      (Knightes Tale, l. 510.)
   'That in that grove he wolde him hyde al day.' (Ib. l. 623.)

In all other cases h is regarded as a consonant; as 'to fernē halwes' (Prol. l. 14); 'of smalē houndes' (Ibid. l. 146); 'the fairē hardy queen' (Knightes Tale, l. 24).

The following metrical analysis of the opening lines of the Prologue will enable the reader to apply the rules already given. The mark ' represents an unaccented, and " an accented syllable; the italic e represents that e is elided.

'Whan thāt | āpril | lē wīth | hīs shōu | rēs soōtē

1. The final e in Aprille, melodye, is sounded; but is elided in Marche, veyne, nature; because in these cases it is followed by a word commencing with a vowel or with the letter h.

2. The final e in soote, smale, straunge, ferne, seke (l. 18), is sounded, as the sign of the plural number.

3. The final e in roote is sounded, as the sign of the dative case.

4. The final e in svete, yonge, halfe, is sounded, as the sign of the definitive form of the adjective.

5. The final e in sonne, y-e, ende, is sounded, and represents an older A. S. vowel-ending (A. S. sunne, ēage, ende).

6. The final e in yronne is sounded, as the sign of the past participle, yronne representing the older yronnen (A. S. gerunnen).

7. The final e in to seke is sounded, as the sign of the gerund representing the fuller form to sekene (A. S. tō sēcannē).

8. The final en in holpen is sounded, as being the sign of the p.p. of a strong verb.

9. The final en is sounded in maken, slepen, longen, as the sign of the present plural indicative.

10. The final en is sounded in to seken, as the sign of the gerund; see above.

11. The final es in shoures, crophes, fowles, strondes, halwes, londes, is sounded, as the inflexion of the plural number.

12. The final es is sounded in shires, as the inflexion of the genitive case.
POSTSCRIPT TO THE INTRODUCTION.

13. Licour, vertu, nature, and corages, are accented on the second syllable, as in Old French.

I gladly take the present opportunity of thanking my kind friends the Rev. W. W. Skeat and Mr. Furnivall for many valuable notes and suggestions.

POSTSCRIPT TO THE REVISED EDITION OF 1888.

(By the Rev. Professor Skeat.)

The text of former editions of this selection from the Canterbury Tales was at first taken from the well-known MS. Harl. 7334 (in the British Museum), which, however, is by no means free from clerical errors. It was afterwards revised throughout by a careful collation with the Ellesmere, Hengwrt, and Corpus MSS. printed in Dr. Furnivall’s Six-Text edition of Chaucer’s Canterbury Tales. The Cambridge, Lansdowne, and Petworth MSS. in the same edition were also consulted in cases of difficulty, but did not prove of much service in correcting the blunders of the Harleian MS.

The present text, as revised in 1888, is entirely new, having been reprinted throughout. The differences thus introduced, though extremely numerous, are almost all of a minute character, and may not appear, at first sight, of any particular value or importance. They are, in fact, due to taking the Ellesmere MS. as the basis of the text, instead of the Harleian MS. This produces very little change in the wording, but the result is more satisfactory from a phonetic point of view, as the spelling in the Ellesmere MS. is remarkable for clearness and intelligibility, and is fairly uniform in character. There is also a great adh This work, which is itself a great tribute to the memory of Chaucer, should be in the hands of every Chaucerian scholar.

vantage in conforming the spelling in the present selection to that in the other two books of selections published in the same series; for in both of these books the Ellesmere MS. was taken as the chief authority for the text.

A few modifications have been made in the spelling in order to render the text more exactly phonetic. Of these, one is a more regular use of \( i \) and \( y \), symbols which are needlessly confused in the MS. The short vowel is here usually printed as \( i \), as in the words \( his, swich, is, Zephrus, &c. \); whilst the long vowel is usually denoted by \( y \), as \( melodye, nyne, ryde, wyde \). This distinction is frequently made in the MS., and occurs in all the words here cited. The MS. is also followed in words like \( inspired, shires \), where there can hardly be any mistake; the modern sound is here a sure guide to the length of the vowel, though we now substitute the sound of the \( ei \) in \( height \) for the Chaucerian \( i \) (as in Mod. E. \( machine \)). It must suffice to say that the text is now much more exactly phonetic than before, whilst at the same time the readings of the Ellesmere MS. are usually better than those of any other MS. The student who wishes to understand the pronunciation of Chaucer's English, which is a very important matter, is referred to the clear and full account of it by Mr. Ellis, as printed in the Preface to The Tale of the Man of Lawe, pp. ix–xix, where the spelling of the MS. is fully explained.

In the present edition, the opportunity has also been taken of giving all the variations from the Ellesmere MS. that are of any importance in the form of footnotes at the bottom of every page. The abbreviations here used are the same as in the other selections from Chaucer, and are there explained. Briefly, the symbols, E., Hn., Cm., Cp., Pt., Ln., Hl., denote respectively the Ellesmere MS., the Hengwrt MS., the Cambridge MS. (marked Gg. 4. 27 in the Cambridge University Library), the MS. in Corpus Christi College, Oxford, the Petworth MS. (belonging to Lord Leconfield), the Lansdowne MS. 851 (in the British Museum), and the Harleian MS. 7334 (in the same). The text follows E., except where notice is given to the contrary.

The numbering of the lines in the Six-Text edition is noted throughout. In the Prologue, there is no variation. In the Knightes Tale, l. 2 corresponds to l. 860 of Group A in that edition, which is denoted by printing (860) within marks of parenthesis; and so on. In the Nonne Preestes Tale, l. 1 corresponds to l. 4011 of Group B in that edition, denoted by printing (4011); and so on. In the Index of Proper Names, the references are given to the Six-Text edition only; but can easily be found by help of the numbers within marks of parenthesis.

The Introduction to The Prioresses Tale, &c., contains, amongst other things; (1) the method of grouping the Tales, according to the right dates; (2) remarks on Chaucer’s varieties of rhythm; (3) further remarks on grammatical forms; (4) further remarks on metre and versification; (5) an analysis of the metre of the Squire’s Tale; (6) hints as to books useful for understanding Chaucer; (7) a list of Chaucer’s works, with notes on some that have been falsely attributed to him; and (8) a discussion of the Romaunt of the Rose. Some of this information is almost indispensable, but is too full of detail to be here repeated.

The Introduction to the Man of Lawes Tale, &c., contains the account, by Mr. Ellis, of the pronunciation of Chaucer’s English, as already stated.

The Introduction to the Clarendon Press Edition of Chaucer’s Minor Poems discusses the genuineness of the numerous pieces at various times attributed to Chaucer, and gives some account of the editions of the poet’s works. Some of the remarks upon the poems of ‘Anelida and Arcite’ and ‘The Parlement of Foules’ are so important for the right understanding of the Knightes Tale that the substance of them is here repeated.

It appears, from internal evidence, that ‘Anelida and Arcite’ was written before the Knightes Tale, and was never finished. It is probable that Chaucer actually wrote an earlier draught of the Knightes Tale, with the title of Palamon and Arcite, which he afterwards partially rejected; for he mentions 'The Love of Palamon and Arcite' in the Prologue to the Legend of Good Women as if it were an independent work. We must suppose that Chaucer originally translated the Teseide of Boccaccio rather closely, substituting a seven-line stanza for the ottava rima of the Italian poet; this formed the original 'Palamon and Arcite,' a poem which was perhaps never finished. Not wishing, however, to abandon it altogether, Chaucer probably used some of the lines over again in 'Anelida,' and introduced others into the Parlement of Foules and elsewhere. At a later period, he rewrote the whole story in rimed pairs of five-accent lines, which is now known to us as The Knightes Tale. Whatever the right explanation may be, we are at any rate certain that the Teseide is the source of (1) sixteen stanzas in the Parlement of Foules\(^k\); (2) of part of the first ten stanzas of Anelida and Arcite\(^1\); (3) of three stanzas near the end of Troilus and Creseida\(^m\); (4) of the original Palamon and Arcite; (5) of the Knightes Tale.

For further information, see Ten Brink, Chaucer-Studien, Münster, 1870; and Essays on Chaucer, published by the Chaucer Society. It must be added that Professor Ten Brink has written another valuable work on Chaucer, entitled Chaucers Sprache und Verskunst, Leipzig, 1884; from which much may be learnt.

With regard to the Nonne Preestes Tale, it has already been remarked (at p. xxviii) that the germ of it is to be found in a short fable by Marie de France, afterwards amplified in the old French Roman du Renart. The fable by Marie de France consists of 38 short lines, and is printed in Dr. Furnivall's Originals and Analogues (Chaucer Society), p. 116, from MS. Harl. 978, leaf 56 (formerly 76). The corresponding portion of Le Roman du Rénart, as edited by Méon in 1826, vol. i. p. 49, is also printed in the same, p. 117; it comprises 454 lines (ll. 1267–1720). Professor Ten Brink shews that Marie's fable closely resembles one found in a Latin collection of Æsopian fables in a MS. at Göttingen, which he quotes in full (id. p. 114), and refers us for it to Oesterley, Romulus, Berlin, 1870, p. 108.

A translation of Marie's fable, by myself, was printed in The Academy, July 23, 1887 (p. 56); and is here reprinted for the purpose of comparison with Chaucer's story.

THE COCK AND THE FOX.

A Cock our story tells of, who High on a dunghill stood and crew.
A Fox, attracted, straight drew nigh,
And spake soft words of flattery.

'Dear Sir!' said he, 'your look's divine;
I never saw a bird so fine!
I never heard a voice so clear
Except your father's—ah! poor dear!
His voice rang clearly, loudly—but Most clearly, when his eyes were shut!'

'The same with me!' the Cock replies,
And flaps his wings, and shuts his eyes.
Each note rings clearer than the last—
The Fox starts up, and holds him fast;
Towards the wood he hies apace.

But as he crossed an open space,
The shepherds spy him; off they fly;
The dogs give chase with hue and cry.
The Fox still holds the Cock, though fear Suggests his case is growing queer.—
'Tush!' cries the Cock, 'cry out, to grieve 'em,
"The cock is mine! I'll never leave him!"'

The Fox attempts, in scorn, to shout,
And opes his mouth; the Cock slips out,
And, in a trice, has gained a tree.

Too late the Fox begins to see
How well the Cock his game has play'd;
For once his tricks have been repaid.
In angry language, uncontrolled,
He 'gins to curse the mouth that's bold
To speak, when it should silent be.

'Well,' says the Cock, 'the same with me;
I curse the eyes that go to sleep
Just when they ought sharp watch to keep Lest evil to their lord befall.'

Thus fools contrariously do all:
They chatter when they should be dumb,
And, when they ought to speak, are mum.
The Notes have been carefully revised throughout, and the opportunity has been taken of verifying all the references, wherever practicable. Besides this, a considerable number of new Notes have been added (from my own stores), so that the additions amount to about a third of the whole.

The Glossarial Index has also been revised, because the numerous slight alterations in the spelling of the text rendered this absolutely necessary. For this purpose, every reference has been verified, and a few misprints in the numbers corrected. The etymologies have, in some cases, been reconsidered and altered.

The List of Proper Names, following the Glossarial Index, is a new addition. See p. lii.

We hope that the present reprint will be of increased service to all students and readers.

* See p. xiv. Chaucer as Forester of North Petherton Park, Co. Somerset. The Earls of March were Foresters of North Petherton under the King, and appointed substitutionary foresters. Among the appointments are these:
'10 Ric. II (June 1386-7). Richard Brittle, by the appointment of the Earl of March.

'14 Ric. II (June 1390-1). Richard Brittle and Gefferey Chaucer, by the appointment of the Earl of March (Roger, who died July 20, 1398).

'21 Ric. II (June 1397-8). Gefferey Chaucer, by Alianor, Countess of March.' Collinson, Hist. and Antiq. of the Co. of Somerset, iii. 62.

I take Chaucer's first appointment to be a joint one with Brittle, and suppose that this continued till Chaucer was made sole Forester by Lady March, probably while her husband was lying on his death-bed. Mr. Floyd, however, who found the entries, and Mr. Walford D. Selby, who wrote on them in the Athenæum, Nov. 20, 1886, and Life Records of Chaucer, ii. p. 117 (Chaucer Soc. 1886), both better authorities than I, hold that as a joint appointment is most unusual, R. Brittle was Forester until 14 Ric. II; that in that year, that is, between June 22, 1390, and June 21, 1391, Chaucer succeeded him, and remained Forester till his own death in 1400. Earl Roger died July 20, 1398, and soon after, his widow appointed Chaucer, that is, continued him in his office. Collinson should therefore read 22 Ric. II (June 1398-9), not 21. I doubt.—F. J. F.
WHAN that Aprille with his shoures soote
The droghte of Marche hath perced to the roote,
And bathed every veyne in swich licour,
Of which vertu engendred is the flour;
Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth
Inspired hath in every holt and heeth
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the Ram his halfe cours y-ronne,
And smale fowles maken melodye,
That slepen al the night with open ye,
(So priketh hem nature in hir corages):
Than longen folk to goon on pilgrimages,
And palmers for to seken straunge strondes,
To ferne halwes, couthe in sondry londes;
And specially, from every shires ende
Of Engelond, to Caunterbury they wende,
The holy blissful martir for to seke,
That hem hath holpen, whan that they were seke.

Bifel that, in that sesoun on a day,
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Caunterbury with ful devout corage,
At night was come in-to that hostelrye
Wel nyne and twenty in a compaignye,
Of sondry folk, by aventure y-falle
In felawship and pilgrims were they alle,
That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde;
The chambres and the stables weren wyde,
And wel we weren esed atte beste.
And shortly, whan the sonne was to reste,
So hadde I spoken with hem everichon,
That I was of hir felawship anon,
And made forward erly for to ryse,
To take our wey, ther as I yow devyse.

But natheles, whyl I have tyme and space,
Er that I ferther in this tale pace,
Me thinketh it acordaunt to resoun,
To telle yow al the condicioun
Of ech of hem, so as it seemed me,
And whiche they weren, and of what degree;
And eek in what array that they were inne:
And at a knight than wol I first biginne.

A KNIGHT ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the tyme that he first bigan
To ryden out, he loved chivalrye,
Trouthe and honour, fredom and curteisy.

Ful worthy was he in his lordes werre,
And therto hadde he riden (no man ferre)
As wel in cristendom as he
And evere honoured for his worthinesse.
At Alisaundre he was, when it was wonne;
Ful ofte tyme he hadde the bord bigonne
Aboven alle naciouns in Pruce.
In Lettow hadde he reysed and in Ruce,
No cristen man so ofte of his degree.
In Gernade at the sege eek hadde he be
Of Algezir, and riden in Belmarye.
At Lyeys was he, and at Satalye,
Whan they were wonne; and in the Grete See
At many a noble aryve hadde he be.
At mortal batailles hadde he been fiftene,
And foughten for our feith at Tramissene
In listes thryes, and ay slayn his foo.
This ilke worthy knight hadde been also Somtyme with the lord of Palatyne,
Ageyn another hethen in Turkye:
And everemore he hadde a sovereyn prys.
And though that he were worthy, he was wys,
And of his port as meek as is a mayde.
He nevere yet no vilein ye ne sayde
In al his lyf, un-to no maner wight.
He was a verray parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellen yow of his array,
His hors were goode, but he was nat gay.
Of fustian he wered a gipoun
Al bismotered with his habergeoun.
For he was late y-come from his viage, And wente for to doon his pilgrimage. With him ther was his sone, a yong Squyer, A lovyer, and a lusty bacheler, With lokkes crulle, as they were leyd in presse. Of twenty yeer of age he was, I gesse. Of his stature he was of evene lengthe, And wonderly delivere, and greet of strength. And he hadde been somtyme in chivachye, In Flaundres, in Artoys, and Pleardye, And born him wel, as of so litel space, In hope to stonden in his lady grace. Embrouded was he, as it were a mede Al ful of fresshe floures, whyte and rede Singinge he was, or floytinge, al the day; He was as fresh as is the month of May. Short was his goune, with sleves longe and wyde. Wel coude he sitte on hors, and faire ryde. He coude songs make and wel endyte, Iuste and eek daunce, and wel purtreye and wryte. So hote he lovede, that by nightertale He sleep namore than dooth a nightingale. Cortseys he was, lowly, and servisable, And carf biforn his fader at the table. Another Nonne with hir hadde she,
That was hir chapeleyne, and Preestes thre.
A Monk ther was, a fair for the maistrye,
An out-rydere, that lovede venerye;
A manly man, to been an abbot able.
Ful many a deyntee hors hadde he in stable:

And held after the newe world the space.
He yaf nat of that text a pulled hen,
That seith, that hunters been nat holy men;
Ne that a monk, whan he is cloisterlees,
Is likned til a fish that is waterlees;
This is to seyn, a monk out of his cloistre.
But thilke text held he nat worth an oistre.
And I seyde his opinioun was good.
What sholde he studie, and make him-selven wood,
Upon a book in cloistre alwey to poure,
Or swinken with his handes, and laboure,
As Austin bit? How shal the world be served?
Lat Austin have his swink to him reserved.
Therfor he was a pricasour aright;
Grehoundes he hadde, as swifte as fowel in flight;
Of priking and of hunting for the hare

And, for to festne his hood under his chin,
He hadde of gold y-wroght a curious pin:
A love-knot in the gretter ende ther was.
His heed was balled, that shoon as any glas,
And eek his face, as he hadde been anoint.
He was a lord ful fat and in good point;
His eyen stepe, and rollinge in his heed,

Un-to his ordre he was a noble post.
Ful wel biloved and famulier was he
With frankeleyns over-al in his contree,
And eek with worthy wommen of the toun:
For he had power of confesioun,
As seyde him-self, more than a curat,
For of his ordre he was licentiat.
Ful swetely herde he confesioun,
And plesaunt was his absolucioun;
He was an esy man to yeve penaunce
Ther as he wiste to han a good pitaunce;
For unto a povre ordre for to yive
Is signe that a man is wel y-shrive.

And certeinely he hadde a mery note;
Wel coude he singe and pleyen on a rote.
Of yeddinges he bar utterly the pryys.
His nekke whyt was as the flour-de-lys.
Ther-to he strong was as a champaign.
He knew the tavernes wel in every toun,
And everich hostiler and tappestere –
Bet than a lazar or a beggestere;
For un-to swich a worthy man as he Acorded nat, as by his facultee,
To have with seke lazars aqueyntaunce.
It is nat honest, it may nat avaunce
For to delen with no swich poraille,
But al with riche and sellers of vitaille.

And ther-to brood, as though it were a spade.
Up-on the cop right of his nose he hade
A werte, and ther-on stood a tuft of heres,
Reed as the bristles of a sowes eres;
His nose-thirles blake were and wyde.
A swerd and bokeler bar he by his syde;
His mouth as greet was as a greet forneys.
He was a langlere and a goHardeys,
And that was most of sinne and harlotryes.
Wel coude he stelen corn, and tollen thryes;
And yet he hadde a thombe of gold, pardee.
A whyt cote and a blew hood wered he.
A baggepype wel coude he blowe and sowne,

This thing was graunted, and our othes swore
With ful glad herte, and preyden him also
That he wold vouche-sauff for to do so,
And that he wolde been our governour,
And of our tales Iuge and reportour,
And sette a soper at a certeyn prys;
And we wold \(3\) reuled been at his devys,
In heigh and lowe \(4\); and thus, by oon assent,
We been acorded to his Iugement.

THE KNIGHTES TALE.

(Group A, ll. 859–3108 in the Six-text edition.)

Iamque domos patrias; Scithice post aspera gentis
Prelia laurigero, &c.

[Statius, Theb. xii. 519.]

Whylom, as olde stories tellen us,
Ther was a duk that highte Theseus;         (860)
Of Athenes he was lord and governour,
And in his tyme swich a conquerour,
That gretter was ther noon under the sonne.  5
Ful many a riche contree hadde he wonne;
That with his wisdom and his chivalrye
He conquered al the regne of Femenye,
That whylom was y-cleped Scithia;
And weddede 1 the queen Ipolita,         10
And broghte hir hoom with him in his contree
With muchel glorie and greet solempniteit,
And eek hir yonge 2 suster Emelye.
And thus with victorie and with melodye
Lete I this noble duk to Athenes ryde,  15
And al his hoost, in armes him bisyde.

And certes, if it nere to long to here,
I wolde han told yow 3 fully the manere,

1 Cp. Hl. weddede; Cm. weddide; the rest wedded.
2 E. faire; Pt. yenge; the rest yonge.
3 Hl. han told yow; E. yow haue toold; the rest haue toold(told).
How wonnen was the regne of Femenye
By Theseus, and by his chivalrye;
And of the grete bataille for the nones
Bitwixen Athenes and the Amazones;
And how asseged was Ipolita,
The faire hardy queen of Scithia;
And of the feste that was at hir weddinge,
And of the tempest at hir hoom-cominge;
But al that thing I moot as now forbere.
I have, God woot, a large feeld to ere,
And wayke been the oxen in my plough,
The remenant of the tale is long ynough;
I wol nat letten eek noon of this route,
Lat every felawe telle his tale aboute,
And lat see now who shal the soper winne,
And ther I lefte, I wol ageyn biginne.

This duk, of whom I make mencioun,
When he was come almost unto the toun,
In al his wele and in his moste pryde,
He was war, as he caste his eye asyde,
Wher that ther kneled in the hye weye
A compaignye of ladies, tweye and tweye,
Ech after other, clad in clothes blake;
But swich a cry and swich a wo they make,
That in this world his creature livinge,
That herde swich another weymentinge;
And of this cry they nolde nevere stenten,
Til they the reynes of his brydel henten.

‘What folk been ye, that at myn hoom-cominge
Perturben so my feste with cryinge?’

1 Tyrwhitt has the; which the MSS. omit.
2 Hl. lètte eek non of al; the rest have letten, and omit al.
3 E. om. hye; the rest hye, heighe, hihe, highe, high.
Quod Theseus, 'have ye so greet envye
Of myn honour, that thus compleyne and crye?
Or who hath yow misboden, or offended?
And telleth me if it may been amended;
And why that ye been clothed thus in blak?'

The eldest lady of hem alle spak,
When she hadde swowned with a deedly chere,
That it was rewthe for to seen and here,
And seyde: 'Lord, to whom Fortune hath yiven
Victorie, and as a conquerour to liven,
Noght greveth us your glorie and your honour;
But we biseken mercy and socour.
Have mercy on our wo and our distresse.
Som droppe of pitee, thurgh thy gentillesse,
Upon us wrecched wommen lat thou falle.
For certes, lord, ther nis noon of us alle,
That she nath been a duchesse or a quene;
Now be we caitifs, as it is wel sene:
Thanked be Fortune, and hir false wheel,
That noon estat assureth to be weel.
And certes, lord, to abyden youre presence,
Here in the temple of the goddess Clemence
We han ben waytinge al this fourtenight;
Now help us, lord, sith it is in thy might.
I wrecche, which that wepe and waille thus,
Was whylom wyf to king Capaneus,
That starf at Thebes, cursed be that day!
And alle we, that been in this array,
And maken al this lamentacioun,
We losten alle our housbondes at that toun,
Whyl that the sege ther-aboute lay.
And yet the olde Creon, weylaway!
That lord is now of Thebes the citee,
Fulfild of ire and of iniquitee,
He, for despyt, and for his tirannye,
To do the dede bodyes vileinye,
Of alle our lordees, whiche that ben slawe,
Hath alle the bodyes on an heep y-drawe,
And wol nat suffren hem, by noon assent,
Neither to been y-buried nor y-brent,
But maketh houndes ete hem in despyt.'
And with that word, with-outen more respyt,
They fillen gruf, and cryden pitously,
'Have on us wrecched wommen som mercy,
And lat our sorwe sinken in thyn herte.'
This gentil duk doun from his courser sterte
With herte pitous, whan he herde hem speke.
Him thoughte that his herte wolde breke,
Whan he saugh hem so pitous and so mat,
That whylom weren of so greet estat.
And in his armes he hem alle up hente,
And hem conforteth in ful good entente;
And swoor his oth, as he was trewe knight,
He wolde doon so ferforthly his might
Upon the tyraunt Creon hem to wreke,
That al the peple of Grece sholde speke
How Creon was of Theseus y-served,
As he that hadde his deth ful wel deserved.
And right anoon, with-outen more abood,
His baner he desplayeth, and forth rood
To Thebes-ward, and al his host bisyde;

\[\text{\footnote{1 All but Hl. ins. now.}}\]
\[\text{\footnote{2 E. He hath; rest Hath.}}\]
\[\text{\footnote{3 E. maat, estaat.}}\]
No neer Athenes wolde he go ne ryde,
Ne take his ese fully half a day,
But onward on his wey that night he lay;
And sente anoon Ipolita the quene,
And Emelye hir yonge suster shene,
Un-to the toun of Athenës to dwelle;
And forth he rit; ther is namore to telle.

The rede statue of Mars with spere and targe
So shyneth in his whyte baner large,
That alle the feeldes gliteren up and doun;
And by his baner born is his penoun
Of gold ful riche, in which ther was y-bete
The Minotaur which that he slough in Crete.
Thus rit this duk, thus rit this conquerour,
And in his host of chivalrye the flour,
Til that he cam to Thebes, and alignte
Faire in a feeld, ther as he thoughte fighte.
But shortly for to speken of this thing,
With Creon, which that was of Thebes king,
He faught, and slough him manly as a knight
In pleyn bataille, and putte the folk to flight;
And by assaut he wan the citee after,
Andrente adoun bothe wal, and sparre, and rafter;
And to the ladyes he restored agayn
The bones of hir housbondes that were slayn,
To doon obsequies, as was tho the gyse.
But it were al to long for to devyse
The grete clamour and the waymentinge
That the ladyes made at the brenninge
Of the bodyes, and the grete honour
That Theseus, the noble conquerour,
Doth to the ladyes, whan they from him wente;

1 Hil. Which that.
But shortly for to telle is myn entente. (1000)
Whan that this worthy duk, this Theseus,
Hath Creon slayn, and wonne Thebes thus,
Stille in that feeld he took al night his reste, 145
And dide with al the contree as him leste.

To ransake in the tas\(^1\) of bodyes dede,
Hem for to strepe of harneys and of wede,
The pilours diden bisynnesse and cure,
After the bataille and disconfiture. 150
And so bifel, that in the tas\(^1\) thei founde, Thurgh-girt with many a grevous blody wounde, (1010)
Two yonge knightes ligging by and by,
Bothe in oon armes, wroght ful richely;
Of whiche two, Arcita hight\(^3\) that oon, 155
And that other knight hight\(^3\) Palamon.
Nat fully quike, ne fully dede they were,
But by hir cote-armures, and by hir gere,
The heraudes knewe hem best in special,
As they that weren of the blood roial 160
Of Thebes, and of sustren two y-born.
Out of the tas\(^1\) the pilours han hem torn, (1020)
And han hem caried softe un-to the tente
Of Theseus, and he ful sone\(^4\) hem sente
To Athenës\(^5\), to dwellen in prisoun
Perpetuely, he nolde no raunsoun.
And whan this worthy duk hath thus y-don,
He took his host, and hoom he rood anon
With laurer crowned as a conquerour;
And there he liveth in Ioye and in honour 170
Terme of his\(^6\) lyf; what nedeth wordes mo?

Of which I tolde yow, and tellen shal)
Was evene Ioynant to the gardin-wal,
Ther as this Emelye hadde hir pleyinge.
Bright was the sonne, and cleer that morweninge,
And Palamon, this woful prisoner,
As was his wone, by leve of his gayler,
Was risen, and romed in a chambre on heigh,
In which he al the noble citee seigh,
And eek the gardin, ful of braunches grene,
Ther as this fresshe Emelye the shene
Was in hir walk, and romed up and doun.
This sorweful prisoner, this Palamoun,
Goth in the chambre, roming to and fro,
And to him-self compleyning of his wo;
That he was born, ful ofte he seyde, 'alas!'
And so bifel, by aventure or cas,
That thurgh a window, thikke of many a barre
Of iren greet, and square as any sparre,
He caste his eye upon Emelya,
And ther-with-al he bleynte, and cryde 'a!'
As though he stongen were un-to the herte.
And with that cry Arcite anon up-sterte,
And seyde, 'Cosin myn, what eyleth thee,
That art so pale and deedly on to see?
Why crydestow? who hath thee doon offence?
For Goddes love, tak al in pacience
Our prisoun, for it may non other be;
Fortune hath yeven us this adversitee.
Som wikke aspect or disposicioun
Of Saturne, by sum constellacioun,
Hath yeven us this, al-though we hadde it sworn;
So stood the heven whan that we were born;
We moste endure it¹: this is the short and pleyn.

This Palamon answerde, and seyde ageyn,
'Cosyn, for sothe, of this opiionioun
Thou hast a veyn imaginacioun.
This prison caused me nat for to crye.
But I was hurt right now thurgh-out myn yē²
In-to myn herte, that wol my bane be.

Yond in the gardin romen to and fro,
Is cause of al my crying and my wo.
I noot wher³ she be womman or goddesse;
But Venus is it, sothly, as I gesse.'
And ther-with-al on kneēs doun⁴ he fil,
And seyde: 'Venus, if it be thy wil
Yow in this gardin thus to transfigure,
Bifore me sorweful wrecche creature,
Out of this prisoun help that we may scapen.
And if so be my destinee be shapen
By eterne word to dyen in prisoun,
Of our linage have som compassioun,
That is so lowe y-broght by tirannye.'
And with that word Arcite gan espye
Wher-as this lady romed to and fro.
And with that sighte hir beautee hurte him so,
That if that Palamon was⁵ wounded sore,
Arcite is hurt as moche as he, or more.
And with a sigh he seyde pitously:
'The fresche beautee sleeth me sodeynly
Of hir that rometh in the yonder place;
And but I have hir mercy and hir grace,'

The thridde night, (as olde bokes seyn,
That al this storie tellen more pleyn,) Were it by aventure or destinee,
(As, whan a thing is shapen, it shal be,) That, sone after the midnight, Palamoun,
By helping of a freend, brak his prisoun,
And fleeth the citee faste as he may go,
For he had yive\(^3\) his gayler drinke so
Of a clarree, maad of a certeyn wyn,
With\(^4\) nercotikes and opie of Thebes fyn,
That al that night, thogh that men wolde him shake,

The quene anon, for verray wommanhede

Gan for to wepe, and so dide Emelye,

And alle the ladies in the compaignye.

(1750)

Gret pitee was it, as it thoughte hem alle,

That evere swich a chaunce sholde falle;

For gentil men they were, of greet estat\(^2\),

And no-thing but for love was this debat\(^3\);

And sawe hir bloody woundes wyde and sore;

And alle cryden, bothe lasse and more,

‘Have mercy, lord, up-on us wommen alle!’

And on hir bare knees adoun they falle,

And wolde have kist his feet ther as he stood,

Til at the laste aslaked was his mood;

(1760)

For pitee renneth sone in gentil herte.

And though he firste for ire quook and sterte,

He hath considered shortly, in a clause,

The trespas of hem bothe, and eek the cause:

And al-though that his ire hir gilt accused,

Yet in his resoun he hem bothe excused;

And thus he thoghte wel, that every man

Wol helpe him-self in love, if that he can,

And eek delivere him-self out of prisoun;

And eek his herte hadde\(^4\) compassioun

(1770)

West-ward, right swich another in the opposit.
And shortly to concluden, swich a place
Was noon in erthe, as in so litel space;
For in the lond ther nas no crafty man,
That geometrie or ars-metrik can,

That Theseus ne yaf him mete and wages
The theatre for to maken and devyse.
And for to doon his ryte and sacrifyse,
He est-ward hath up-on the gate above,
In worship of Venus, goddesse of love,
Doon make an auter and an oratorie;
And west-ward, in the mynde and in memorie
Of Mars, he maked hath right swich another,
That coste largely of gold a fother.
And north-ward, in a touret on the wal,
Of alabastre whyt and reed coral
An oratorie riche for to see,
In worship of Dyane of chastitee,
Hath Theseus doon wroght in noble wyse.
But yet hadde I foryeten to devyse

NOTES.

In the Notes, 'Ch. 2' refers to the Clarendon Press edition of Chaucer's Prioresses Tale, &c.; and 'Ch. 3' to the same of Chaucer's Man of Law's Tale, &c.

THE PROLOGUE.

1. Aprille. It appears that Chaucer's Prologue refers to the 16th and 17th of April. See Man of Law's Prol. ll. 1-6; and Ch. 2, p. 129 and p. xi.

soote, sweet; from A.S. swōt, orig. an adv.; cf. A.S. swēte, adj.

4. vertu, power, corresponding to the A.S. miht, might.

4-6. Hawes seems to have had Chaucer's opening lines in view in the first and second stanzas, chap. i, of his Pastime of Pleasure:—

'When that Aurora did well appeare
In the depured ayre and cruddy firmament,
Forth then I walked without impediment
Into a medowe both gaye and glorious,
Whiche Flora depainted with many a colour,
Lyke a place of pleasure moste solacious,
Encensyng out the aromatike odoure
Of Zepherus breath, whiche that every floure
Through his fume doth alwaye engender.'

Lydgate (Minor Poems, ed. Halliwell, pp. 243, 244) copies Chaucer still more closely in his description of Ver (spring).

On the other hand, Chaucer seems to have had in his mind some passage like the following account in Vincent of Beauvais, Speculum Naturale, lib. xv. c. 66, entitled De Vere:—'Sol vero ad radices herbarum et arborum penetrans, humorem quem ibi coadunatum hyeme reperit, attrahit; herba vero, vel arbore suam inanitionem sentiens a terra attrahit humorem, quem ibi sui similitudine adiuuante calore Solis transmutat, sicque resuiscit; inde est quod quidam mensis huius temporis Aprilis dicitur, quia tunc terra praedicto modo aperitur.'

5. Chaucer twice refers again to Zephirus, in his translation of Boetius, bk. i. met. 5; bk. ii. met. 3.

7. yonge sonne. The sun is here said to be young because it had not long entered upon its annual course through the signs of the zodiac.
8. the Ram. 'The difficulty here really resides in the expression “his halfe cours,” which means what it says, viz. “his half-course,” and not, as Tyrwhitt unfortunately supposed, “half his course.” The results of the two explanations are quite different. Taking Chaucer’s own expression as it stands, he tells us that, a little past the middle of April, “the young sun has run his half-course in the Ram.” Turning to Fig. 1 (in The Astrolabe, ed. Skeat) we see that, against the month “Aprilis” there appears in the circle of zodiacal signs, the latter half (roughly speaking) of Aries, and the former half of Taurus. Thus the sun in April runs a half-course in the Ram and a half-course in the Bull. “The former of these was completed,” says the poet; which is as much as to say, that it was past the eleventh of April.

The sun had, in fact, only just completed his course through the first of the twelve signs, as the said course was supposed to begin at the vernal equinox. This is why it may well be called “the yonge sonne,” an expression which Chaucer repeats under similar circumstances in the Squyeres Tale, Part ii. l. 39.’—Chaucer’s Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, p. xlvi. Mr. Brae, in his edition of Chaucer’s Astrolabe, shews that Chaucer never refers to the constellations, but always to the signs. ‘Also twelue monches ben in the 3ere, and eueriche monche þe sonne entreþ into a signe as it falleþ for þe monche. And so in March þey entreþ into þe Weþer; in Auerel in-to þe Boole.’—Trevisa’s transl. of Higden’s Polychronicon, ii. 207.

‘Hit bifelle bytwyxte March and Maye,
    Whan kynd corage begynneth to pryke,
    Whan frith and felde[+] wexen gaye, ....
    Whan lovers slepen with opyn ye,
    As nightyngalis on grene tre.’

    The Sowdone of Babyloyne, ll. 41-46.

12, 13. Professor Ten Brink thinks that a colon should be placed after pilgrimages, and wenden understood after palmers. According to ordinary English construction the verb lontige must be supplied after palmers, and seken before To ferne halwes.

13. palmer, originally one who made a pilgrimage to the Holy Land and brought home a palm-branch as a token. Chaucer, says Tyrwhitt, seems to consider all pilgrims to foreign parts as palmers. The essential difference between the two classes of persons here mentioned, the palmer and the pilgrim, was, that the latter had "some dwelling-place, a palmer had none; the pilgrim travelled to some certain place, the palmer to all, and not to any one in particular; the pilgrim might go at his own charge, the palmer must profess wilful poverty; the pilgrim might give over his profession, the palmer must be constant;" Blount's Glossographia. See note to P. Plowman, v. 523 (Clar. Press, smaller edition).

'But a prest that a palmer was A palme in his hand he had,
And in a slaveyn he was clad.'—Tundal's Poems, p. 14.

14. ferne halves, distant saints, i.e. shrines. Here ferne = ferrune = distant, foreign; cf. "prie kinges... comen fram verrune londes;" O.E. Miscel. p. 27. Also "this man of ferne londe," i.e. from a distant land; Havelok, 2031. 'To ferne peoples;' Chaucer's Boethius, bk. ii. met. 7. See Mätzner. Ferne also means 'ancient,' but not here.

halves, saints; cp. Scotch Hallow-e'en, the eve of All Hallows, or All Saints; here applied to their shrines.

Chaucer has: 'to go seken halves;' to go (on a pilgrimage) to seek saints' shrines; C. T. 6239.

16. wende, go; pret. wente, Eng. went. The old preterite of go (A.S. gangan) was gieng, which gave place to eode, zede, or yode, from the root i (cf. Lat. i-re) of the weak conjugation. Spenser uses yode as a past tense, but also yeed (wrongly) as a gerund (F. Q. ii. 4. 2).

17. The holy blisful martir, Thomas à Becket. On pilgrimages, see Saunders, Chaucer, p. 15; and Erasmus, Peregrinatio religionis ergo.

18. holpen, pp. of helpen. The older preterites of this verb are heolph, help, halp. Seke, sick, rimes to seke, seek; this apparent repetition is only allowed when the repeated word is used in two different senses.

20. Tabard. Of this word Speght gives the following account in his Glossary to Chaucer:—'Tabard—a jaquet or sleavelesse coate, wore in times past by noblemen in the warres, but now only by heraults (heralds), and is called theye "coate of armes in servise." It is the signe of an inne in Southwarke by London, within the which was the lodging of the Abbot of Hyde by Winchester. This is the hostelry where Chaucer and the other Pilgrims mett together, and, with Henry Daily their hoste, accorded about the manner of their journey to Canterbury. And whereas through time it hath bin much decayed, it is now by Master J. Preston, with the Abbot's house thereto adgoyned, newly repaired, and with convenient rooms much encreased, for the receipt of many guests.' The inn is well described in Saunders (on Chaucer), p. 19. The Taberdars of Queen's College, Oxford, were scholars supposed originally to have worn the tabard, since called, by mistake, the Talbot.

23. hostelrye, a lodging, inn, house, residence. Hostler properly signifies the keeper of an inn, and not, as now, the servant of an inn who looks after the horses. (The A.S. hors-hús signifies an inn—another term was gaest-hús; and hors-herde = an inn-keeper.)
NOTES.

24. wel is here used like our word full.
25. by aventure y-faille, by adventure (chance) fallen (into company).
26. felawshipe, fellowship, from M.E. felawe, companion, fellow.
29. esed atte beste, accommodated or entertained in the best manner.
Easeement is still used as a law term, signifying accommodation.

atte = M.E. atpan = atten or atten, A.S. at thám. In the older stages of the language we find atte used only before masc. and neuter nouns beginning with a consonant; the corresponding feminine form is attar (A.S. at thäre), which is not used by Chaucer.
30. to reste = at rest. Spenser has to friend = for friend; F. Q. i. 1. 28.
33. forward, agreement. ‘Fals was here foreward so forst is in May;'
i.e. their agreement was as false as a frost in May; Ritson’s Ancient Songs, i. 30.
34. ther as I yow devyse, to that place that I tell you of (sc. Canterbury); ther in M. E. frequently signifies where; devyse = to speak of, describe.
35. whyl, whilst; Eng. while, time. Cp. M.E. hwilum, hwile, whilen, awhile. The form in -és (whiles, the reading of some MSS.) is comparatively a modern adverbial form, and may be compared with M.E. hennes, thennes, hence, thence; ones, twies, thries, once, twice, thrice; of which older forms are found in -enne and -e respectively.
37. ‘It seemeth to me it is reasonable.’
Me thinketh = me thinks, where me is the dative before the impersonal vb. thinken, to appear, seem; cp. me liketh, me list, it pleases me. So the phrase if you please = if it please you, you being the dative and not the nominative case. semed me, = it seemed to me, occurs in l. 39.
41. inne. In M.E. in is the preposition, and inne the adverb.
43. Knight. It was a common thing in this age for knights to seek employment in foreign countries which were at war. Tyrwhitt cites from Leland the epitaph of a knight of this period, Matthew de Gourney, who had been at the battle of Benamaryn, at the siege of Algezir, and at the battles of Crecy, Poitiers, &c. See note to l. 51.

worthy, worthy, is here used in its literal signification of distinguished, honourable. See ll. 47, 50.
For notes on the dresses, &c., of the pilgrims, see Todd’s Illustrations of Chaucer, p. 227; and Fairholt’s Costume in England, 1885, i. 129.
45. chivalrye, knighthood; also the manners, exercises, and exploits of a knight.
48. ferre, the comp. of fer, far. Cf. M.E. derre, dearer, sarre, sorer, &c.
49. heathenesse, heathen lands, as distinguished from Cristendom, Christian countries.
51. Alisaundre, in Egypt, 'was won, and immediately after abandoned in 1365, by Pierre de Lusignan, King of Cyprus;' Tyrwhitt. Froissart (Chron. bk. iii. c. 22) gives the epitaph of Pierre de Lusignan, king of Cyprus, who 'conquered in battle . . . the cities of Alexandria in Egypt, Tripoli in Syria, Layas in Armenia, Satalia in Turkey, with several other cities and towns, from the enemies of the faith of Jesus Christ;' tr. by Johnes, vol. ii. p. 138.

52. he hadde the bord bigonne. Here bord = board, table, so that the phrase signifies 'he had been placed at the head of the dais, or table of state.' Warton, in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, ii. 209 (ed. 1871, ii. 373), aptly cites a passage from Gower which is quite explicit as to the sense of the phrase. See Gower, Conf. Amantis, bk. viii. ed. Pauli, iii. 299. We there read that a knight was honoured by a king by being set at the head of the middle table in the hall.

'And he, which had his prise deserved,
After the kinges owne word,
Was maad beginne a middel bord,'

The context shews that this was at supper-time, and that the knight was placed in this honourable position by the marshal of the hall.

It thus appears that the proposal made by Mr. Marsh to explain bord as meaning 'a tournament' is quite uncalled for. Once more, in Sir Beves of Hamptoun, ed. Kölbing (F. E. T. S.), p. 104, we find in one text (l. 2122)—

'Thoy schelt this dai be priour,
And beginneouredeis[131] [daïs];
where another text has (l. 1957) the reading—

'Palmer, thou semest best to me,
Therfore men shal worship the;
Beginyn the borde, I the pray.'

See also Murray's Dict., s.v. Board.

53, 54. Pruce. When our English knights wanted employment, 'it was usual for them to go and serve in Pruce, or Prussia, with the knights of the Teutonic order, who were in a state of constant warfare with their heathen neighbours in Lettow (Lithuania), Ruce (Russia), and elsewhere.'—Tyrwhitt. Similarly, Gower (Conf. Amant. bk. iv, ed. Pauli, ii. 56) says that knights were expected to make 'rodes,' i.e. raids

'Somtime in Pruce, somtime in Rodes;' &c.

54. Walsingham, in his History, ed. Riley, ii. 197, tells us that, in 1390, no less a person than Henry, earl of Derby (afterwards Henry IV) set out for Prussia (profectus est in le Pruys), where 'devicit exercitum Regis de Lettowe, captis quatuor Ducibus,' &c. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, ii. 210, remarks—'Thomas duke of Gloucester, youngest son of Edw. III, and Henry earl of Derby, afterwards Henry IV, travelled into Prussia; and, in conjunction with the grand Masters and Knights of Prussia and Livonia, fought the infidels of Lithuania. Lord Derby was greatly instrumental in taking Vilna, the capital of that country, in the year 1390. Here is a seeming compliment to some of these expeditions.’ Hackluyt, in his Voyages, ed. 1598, i. 122, cites and translates the passage from Walsingham referred to above.

56–58. Gernade, Granada. ‘The city of Algezir was taken from the Moorish King of Granada in 1344.’—T. It is the modern Algeciras on the S. coast of Spain, near Cape Trafalgar.

Belmanye and Tramissene (Tramessen), l. 62, were Moorish kingdoms in Africa, as appears from a passage in Froissart (bk. iv. c. 24) cited by Tyrwhitt. Johnes’s translation has—‘Tunis, Bugis, Morocco, Benmarin, Tremeçen.’ Cf. Kn. Tale, l. 1772. Benmarin is called Balmeryne in Barbour’s Bruce, xx. 393; cf. Belmore, Sowdone of Babylon, 3122.

Lyès, in Armenia, was taken from the Turks by Pierre de Lusignan about 1367. It is the Layas mentioned by Froissart (see note to l. 51), and the modern Ayas; see Marco Polo, ed. Yule, i. 15.

Satalye (Attalia, now Adalia, on the S. coast of Asia Minor) was taken by the same prince soon after 1352.—T. See Acts xiv. 25.

Palatye (Palathia, see l. 65), in Anatolia, was one of the lordships held by Christian knights after the Turkish conquests.—T. Cf. Froissart, bk. iii. c. 23.

59. the Grete See. The name Great Sea is applied by Sir J. Maundeville (cap. 7) to that part of the Mediterranean which washes the coast of Palestine, to distinguish it from the two so-called inland seas, the sea of Tiberias and the Dead Sea. Cf. its proper name in Scripture, Numb. xxxiv. 6, 7; Josh. i. 4.

60. aryve, arrival or disembarkation of troops. Tyrwhitt, following the Ellesmere and other MSS., reads armee.

be = ben, been. Cf. ydo = ydon, done, &c.

62. foughten, pp. fought. This verb belongs to the strong, and not, like the past participles soght, broght, to the weak conjugation.

63. slayn: hadde must be supplied from l. 61.

67. sovereyn prys, exceeding great renown.

70. vileinye, any conduct unbecoming a gentleman. ‘The villain is, first, the serf or peasant, villanus, because attached to the villa or farm. He is, secondly, the peasant, who, it is further taken for granted, will be churlish, selfish, dishonest, and generally of evil moral conditions, these having come to be assumed as always belonging to him, and to be permanently associated with his name, by those . . . who in the main commanded the springs of language. At the third step nothing of the meaning which the etymology suggests—nothing of villa—survives any longer; the peasant is wholly dismissed, and the evil moral conditions of him who is called by this name, alone remain.’—Trench; English Past and Present, ch. 7.
71. no maner wight, no kind of person whatever.
74. 'His horses were good, but he himself was not gaudily dressed.'
75. gipoun, a diminutive of gipe, a short cassock, a tight-fitting vest.
76. habergeoun, though etymologically an augmentative, is practically a diminutive of hauberk, but often used as synonymous with it. 'It was a defence of an inferior description to the hauberk; but when the introduction of plate-armour, in the reign of Edward III, had supplied more convenient and effectual defences for the legs and thighs, the long skirt of the hauberk became superfluous; from that period the habergeon alone seems to have been worn.'—Way, note to Promptorium Parvulorum, p. 220.

'And Tideus, aboue his habergeoun,
A gipoun hadde, hidous, sharpe, and hoor,
Wrought of the bristles of a wilde Boor.'
Lydgate, Siege of Thebes, pt. ii.

77, 78. 'For he had just returned from his journey, and went to perform his pilgrimage (which he had vowed for a safe return) in his knightly array.'

80. lovier, lover. The y in this word is not euphonic as in some modern words; lovier is formed from the verb love, A.S. luflan, to love. bacheler, a young aspirant to knighthood. Cf.

'Wightly Olyuer upsterte
As bacheler, doughti of dede.'
The Sowdone of Babylone, l. 1211.

82. yeer. In the older stages of the language, year, goat, swine, &c., being neuter nouns, underwent no change in the nom. case of the plural number; but after numerals the genitive case was usually required.

I gesse, I should think. In M.E. gesse signifies to judge, believe, suppose. See Kn. Tale, l. 192.

85. chivachye. Fr. chevauchée. It most properly means an expedition with a small party of cavalry; but is often used generally for any military expedition. Holinshed calls it a rode (i.e. raid); cf. note to l. 53 above.

87. born him wel, conducted himself well, behaved bravely.
88. lady grace, lady's grace. In the earlier stages of our language the genitive of feminine nouns terminated in -e, so that lady is for ladye. Cf. the modern phrase 'Lady-day,' as compared with 'Lord's day.'
89. 'That was with floures swete embrouded al;' Prol. to Legend of Good Women, l. 119.

97. nightertale, night-time, time (or reckoning) of night. So also wit nighter-tale, lit. with night-time, Cursor Mundi, l. 2783; on nighter-tale,
NOTES.

id. 2991. The word is used by Holinshed in his account of Joan of Arc (under the date 1429).

98. sleep, also written slep, slepte. Cf. weep, wepte; leep, lepte, &c.; such verbs, once strong, became weak. See l. 148; and Kn. Ta. 1829.

100. carf, the past tense of kerven, to carve (pp. corven).

101. Yeman, yeoman. 'As a title of service, it denoted a servant of the next degree above a garson or groom . . . . The title of yeoman was given in a secondary sense to people of middling rank not in service. The appropriation of the word to signify a small landholder is more modern.'—Tyrwhitt.

102. him liste, it pleased him. liste is past tense; list = pleasest. See note on l. 37.

104. a sheef of pecok-arwes, a sheaf of arrows with peacocks' feathers. Ascham, in his Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 129, does not say much in favour of 'pecock fethers'; for 'there is no fether but onely of a goose that hath all commodities in it. And trewelye at a short but, which some man doth vse, the peacock fether doth seldome kepe vp the shaft eyther ryght or level, it is so roughe and heuy, so that many men which haue taken them vp for gaynesse, hath layde them downe agayne for profyte; thus for our purpose, the goose is best fether for the best shoter.' In the Geste of Robyn Hode, pr. by W. Copland, we read—

'And every arrowe an ell longe
With peacocke well ydight,
And nocked they were with white silk,
It was a semely syght.'

In the Liber Compotis Garderobæ, sub anno 4 Edw. II, p. 53, is this entry—Pro duodecim flechiis cum pennis de pauone emptis pro rege, de 12 den. ; that is, For 12 arrows plumed with peacock's feathers, bought for the king, 12d. (MS. Cotton, Nero c. viii).—Strutt, Sports and Pastimes, bk. ii. ch. 1, § 12. Cf. Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry, ed. 1840, ii. 211.

106. takel, lit. 'implement' or 'implements'; here (perhaps) the set of arrows. Strutt, Sports, bk. ii. ch. 1, § 16, quotes a ballad in which Robin Hood proposes that each man who misses the mark shall lose 'his takell'; and one of the losers says—'Syr abbot, I deliver thee myne arrowe.' In the Cursor Mundi, l. 3600, Isaac sends Esau to hunt, saying:—

'Ga lok thi tacle be puruaid.'

Fairholt (s.v. tackle) quotes from A Lytel Geste of Robyn Hood—

'When they had theyr bowes ibent,
Their takles fedred fre.'

109. not-heed. Tyrwhitt badly explains this as a head like a nut, from the hair probably being cut short; but not-heed = crop-head. Cf. 'To Notte his hair, comas recidere;* Baret's Alvearie, 1580. Cf. notted hair, Jack Juggler, p. 22; where Hazlitt's edition of Dodsley's Plays, vol. ii. p. 135, has the inferior reading knotted hair. Shakespeare has notted, i.e. crop-headed, 1 Henry IV, ii. 4. 78. Cooper's Thesaurus, 1565, has:—Tondere, to cause his hair to be notted or polled of a barbour,' also, to notte his hair shorte,' also, Tonus homo, a man rounded, polled, or notted. Cotgrave explains the F. tonsure as a sheering, clipping, powling, notting, cutting, or paring round. Florio, ed. 1598, explains the Ital. Zucconiere as to poule, to nott, to shauze, or cut off ones hair,' and zuccone as a shauen pate, a notted poule, a pouled pate, a gull, a ninnie, a ioylt-head.' Gouldman's Lat. and E. Dict., 1664, has—To nott or cut the hair away, Tondeo. Notted or clipped, Tonsus.' In later days the name of Roundhead came into use for a like reason.

111. bracer, a guard for the arm used by archers to prevent the friction of the bow-string on the coat. It was made like a glove with a long leathern top, covering the fore-arm (Fairholt). Fr. bras, the arm, whence bracelet.

Phi. Which be instrumentes [of shotynge]?

Tox. Bracer, shotyng-glove, styryng, bowe and shafte. . . .

A bracer serueth for two causes, one to saue his armere from the strype of the styryng, and his doublet from wearynge, and the other is, that the styryng gyldyngne sharplye and quicklye of the bracer, may make the sharper shoote. . . . In a bracer a man muste take hede of .iii. thinges, that it haue no nayles in it, that it haue no bucles, that it be fast on with laces wythout agglettes.'—Ascham's Toxophilus, ed. Arber, pp. 107, 108.

115. Crystofre. 'A figure of St. Christopher, used as a brooch. . . . The figure of St. Christopher was looked upon with particular reverence among the middle and lower classes; and was supposed to possess the power of shielding the person who looked on it from hidden dangers;' note in Wright's Chaucer. St. Christopher's day is July 25. There is a well-known early woodcut which is supposed to exhibit one of the earliest specimens of printing from a wooden block, engraved at p. 123 of the second volume of Chambers, Book of Days, and frequently elsewhere. The inscription beneath the figure of the saint runs as follows:

'Christofori faciem die quacunque tueris,
Illa nempe die morte mala non moriceris.'

Hence the Yeoman wore his brooch for good luck. See also, for the legend, Mrs. Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art, ii. 48–59; and compare Brand's Popular Antiquities, ed. Ellis, i. 359, 364; Butler's Lives of the Saints, July 25.

116. Riley, in his Memorials of London, p. 115, explains baldric as 'a belt passing mostly round one side of the neck, and under the opposite arm.' See Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 29.

120. seynt Loy. Tyrwhitt says that Loy is from Eloy, i.e. St. Eligius, whose day is Dec. 1; see the long account of him in Butler's Lives of the Saints. He was a goldsmith, and master of the mint to Clotaire II, Dagobert I, and Clovis II of France; and was also bishop of Noyon. He became the patron saint of goldsmiths, farriers, smiths, and carters. The Lat. Eligius necessarily became Eloy in O. French, and is Eloy or Loy in English, the latter form being the commoner. The Catholicon Anglicum (A.D. 1483) gives: 'Loye, elegius (sic), nomen proprium.' Sir T. More, Works, ed. 1577, p. 194, says: 'St. Loy we make an horse-leche.' Barnaby Googe, as cited in Brand, Pop. Antiq. i. 364 (ed. Ellis), says:—

'And Loye the smith doth looke to horse, and smithes of all degree,
If they with iron meddle here, or if they goldsmithes bee.'

Dr. Oliver, in his Ecclesiastical Antiquities in Devon, speaks of St. Eligius's Chapel or St. Eloy's Chapel; it is the half-ruined chapel near Exeter commonly called St. Loyes (see The Academy, June 5, 1880, p. 122; and the same, May 29, June 5, 12 and 19, 1880). There is a district called St. Loye's in Bedford. There was a St. Loy's house in Wedon-Pinckney, Northamptonshire, mentioned in Bridges' History of that county (Brand). Churchyard mentions 'sweete Saynet Loy; ' Siege of Leith, st. 50. In Lyndesay's Monarchè, bk. ii. lines 2299 and 2367, he is called 'sanct Eloy.' Much more might be added; see, e.g. St. Eligius in the Index to the Parker Society's publications. In the Cant. Tales, 7146, the carter prays to God and Saint Loy, joining the names according to a common formula; but the Prioress dropped the divine name. Perhaps she invoked St. Loy as being the patron saint of goldsmiths; for she seems to have been little given to a love of gold and corals; see ll. 158–162. Guillaume de Machault (ed. 1849, p. 120), in his Confort d'Ami, near the end, uses the expression:—'Car je te jur, par saint Eloy.' 'By St. Loy, that draws deep;' Nash's Lenten Stuff, p. xiv. ed. Hindley.

'We use to call her at home, dame Coye,
A pretie gingerlie piece, God save her and Saint Loye.'

See also Mrs. Jameson's Sacred and Legendary Art, p. 728. The Harl. MS. has nas, which is merely a shorter form of ne was. Mr. A. J. Ellis thinks that nas should stand, and that seynt should be pronounced as a word of two syllables.
123. noe. This is the reading of the best MSS. Speght reads voice (wrongly).

ssemiely is in some MSS. written semitly. The e is here to be distinctly sounded; hertily is sometimes written for hertely. See l. 136.

125. scole, school; here used for style or pronunciation.

126. Fransh. The French taught in England was the debased form of the Old Anglo-Norman, somewhat similar to that used at a later period in the courts of law; and it was this at which Chaucer and some of his contemporaries sneered. The writer of the Vision of Piers Plowman speaks of French of Norfolk, l. 2949;’ Wright. ‘Chaucer thought but meanly of the English-French spoken in his time. It was proper, however, that the Prioress should speak some sort of French; not only as a woman of fashion, a character which she is represented to affect (ll. 139, 140), but as a religious person;’ Tyrwhitt.

‘It is necessary to quote the above rather odd criticisms by Wright and Tyrwhitt because they have been too often repeated. There is nothing to shew that Chaucer intended a sneer; he merely states a fact, viz. that the Prioress spoke the usual Anglo-French of the English court, of the English law-courts, and of the English ecclesiastics of the higher rank. The poet, however, had been himself in France, and knew precisely the difference between the two dialects; yet there is no proof that he thought more highly of the Parisian than of the Anglo-French. He merely states that the French which the Prioress spoke was, naturally, such as was spoken in England. She had never travelled, and was therefore quite satisfied with the French which she had learnt at home. The language of the King of England was quite as good, in the esteem of Chaucer’s hearers, as that of the King of France. Warton’s note on the line is quite sane. He shews that queen Philippa wrote business letters in French (doubtless Anglo-French) with “great propriety.” What Mr. Wright means by saying that “it was similar to that used at a later period in the courts of law” is somewhat puzzling. It was, of course, not similar to, but the very same language as was used at the very same period in the courts of law. In fact, he and Tyrwhitt have unconsciously given us the view entertained, not by Chaucer, but by unthinking readers of the present age; a view which is not expressed, and was probably not intended. At the modern Stratford we may find Parisian French inefficiently taught; but at the ancient Stratford, the very important Anglo-French was taught efficiently enough. There is no parallel between the cases, nor any such jest as the modern journalist is never weary of. The “French of Norfolk” as spoken of in P. Plowman (B. v. 239) was no French at all, but English; and the alleged parallel is misleading, as the reader who cares to refer to that passage will easily see.’—Skeat.

127. At mete. These simple conditions of good breeding are to be found in most of the mediaeval tracts on Curtesy and Nurture, written for the purpose of teaching manners at table. See The Babees Book, Early Eng. Text Society.

It is, however, of much more importance to observe that Tyrwhitt has acutely pointed out how Chaucer, throughout this passage, merely reproduces what he had found in his favourite book, viz. Le Roman de la Rose, l. 13612, &c.

‘Et bien se gart qu'ele ne moile
Ses dois es broez jusqu'as jointes,
Ne qu'el n'ait pas ses levres ointes
De sopes, d'aulx, ne de char grasse,
Ne que trop de morsiaus n'entasse,
Ne trop gros, nes mete en sa bouche.
Du bout des dois le morsel touche
Qu'el devra moillier en la sauce,
Soit vert, ou cameline, ou jauce,
Et sagement port sa bouchée
Que sus son piz goute n'en chée
De sope, de savor, de poivre.
Et si gentement redoit boivre,
Que sor soi n'en espande goute.’

I.e. ‘and takes good care not to wet her fingers up to the joints in broth, nor to have her lips anointed with soups, or garlic, or fat flesh, nor to heap up too many or too large morsels and put them in her mouth. She touches with the tips of her fingers the morsel which she has to moisten with the sauce (be it green, or brown, or yellow), and lifts her mouthful warily, so that no drop of the soup, or relish or pepper may fall on her breast. And so daintily she contrives to drink, as not to sprinkle a drop upon herself.’

Again, a few lines below:—

‘Si doit si bien sa bouche terdre,
Qu'el n'i lest nule gresse aerdre,
Au mains en la levre desseure.’

I.e. ‘she ought to wipe her lip so well, as not to permit any grease to stay there, at least upon her upper lip.’ Cf. also Ovid, Ars Amatoria, iii. 755, 756.

132. lest = list, pleasure, delight.
134. ferthing signifies literally a fourth part, and hence a small portion.

‘Embremwe not youre vesselle ne youre napery
Ouer mesure and maner, but saue them clene:
Ensoyle not youre cuppe, but kepe hit clenely,
Lete no fatte ferthyng of youre lippe be sen;
For that is foule; wotte you what I mene?
Or than ye drineke, for youre owne honesté,
Youre lippis wepe [wipe], and klenly loke they be.
Blowe not in youre drinke ne in youre potage,
Ne farsith not youre disshe to full of brede,
Ne bere not youre knyf towarde youre vysage,
For there-in is parell and mekell drede.
Clawe not youre face ne touche not youre hede
Wyth youre bare hande, sitting at the table,
For in norture that is reprouable.'

Caxton's Book of Curtesye, p. 20.

139. peyned hir, took pains, endeavoured.
139, 140. to countrefete chere Of court, to imitate courtly behaviour.
141. to ben holden, &c., to be esteemed worthy of reverence.
147. wastel breed. Horses and dogs were not usually fed on wastel breed or cake bread (bread made of the best flour), but on coarse lentil bread baked for that purpose. 'The domestic baker prepared several kinds and qualities of bread, suitable to the various departments of the household; the manchet loaf of wheaten flour was for the master's table, the fine chete for the side-tables, and the brown bread for the board's end. The finer quality was made of flour passed through a sieve or boulting-cloth, and sometimes called boulted bread; the chete was of unboulted flour, and the household was made of a mixture of flour and rye-meal, called mystelon or maslin; the latter was the quality usually made in the houses of the middle class; the poor ate bread made of rye, lentils, and oatmeal. Fancy bread, such as paynepuff and marchpane, was prepared for company; the latter was in old times a favourite delicacy, made of flour, sugar, and almonds; originally it was used especially at Easter, and called mass-pane, or mass-bread, and sometimes paynemayne.'—Our English Home, pp. 79, 80. Cf. Riley, Memorials of London, p. 108; tr. of Liber Albus, p. 305. In l. 334 we read that the Frankeleyn loved a 'sop in wyn.' In the Anturs of Arther at the Tarnewathelan, st. 37, we read that 'There soppys of demayn (i.e. paindemayne)

Wos broghte to Sir Gauan
For to cumford his brayne.'

And in Harl. MS. 279, fol. 10, we have the necessary instruction for the making of these sops. 'Take mylk and boyle it, and thanne (then) tak (take) yolkys (yolks) of eyroun (eggs), ytryd (separated) fro (from) the whyte, and hete it, but let it nowt boyle, and stere (stir) it wyl tyl it be somewhat thikke; thenne cast therto salt and sugre, and kyttie (cut) fayre paynemaynys in round soppys, and caste the soppys theron, and serue it forth for a potage.'—Way, in Promptorium Parvulorum, p. 378.

148. But sore weep she if oon, &c. Read But so / re weep / shif oon, &c.
149. men smoot. If men were the ordinary plural of man, smoot ought to be smitten (pl. past); but men, M.E. me, is used like the Ger. man, French on, with the singular verb.

_yerde*, stick, rod. Cf. yard-measure, and yard as a nautical term; a gird of land (about seven acres of ploughland, and pasture for two oxen, one cow, and six sheep).

151. wimpel. The wimpel or gorger is stated first to have appeared in Edward the First’s reign. It was a covering for the neck, and was used by nuns and elderly ladies. See Gloss. to Spec. of English, Part I; Reliq. Antiquae, ii. 15; Fairholt’s Costume, 1885, ii. 413.

pinched. ‘But though I olde and hore be, sone myne,
And poore by my clothing and aray,
And not so wyde a gown have as is thynye
So small ypynched and so gay,
My rede in happe yit the profit may.’

Occleve, De Reg. Principum, p. 15.

152. eye greye. This seems to have been the favourite colour of ladies’ eyes in Chaucer’s time. Cf. C. T. 3972; Rom. Rose, 546, 862; also—

‘Hyr forheed lely whyght,
Hyr bent browys blake, and hyr grey eyne,
Hyr chyry chekes, hyn nose streyt and ryht,

‘Her eyes are greye as glass.’—Two Gent. of Verona, iv. 4. 197.

156. hardily is here used for sikerly, certainly; see Ch. 2, Gloss.

war, aware; ‘I was war’ = I perceived.

159. bedes. The word bede signifies, (1) a prayer; (2) a string of grains upon which the prayers were counted, or the grains themselves. See Glossary, s. v. Bede. A pair here means ‘a set.’ ‘A peire of bedis eke she bere;’ Rom. Rose, 7372.

‘Sumtyme with a portas, sumtyme with a payre of bedes.’

Bayle’s King John, p. 27; Camden Soc.

In the year 1399, Eleanor of Gloucester in her last will left her mother ‘a pair of paternosters of coral.’—Nicolas, Test. Vet. i. 147. In 1412, Roger de Kyrkly had num par de bedes et unus agnas dei.—Wills and Inventories, p. 56; Surtees Soc.

gaued al with grene, having the gawdies green. Some were of silver gilt. The gawdies or gaudees were the larger beads in the set. ‘A peyre bedys of jeete [get], gaued with corall;’ Bury Wills, p. 82, l. 16. The note says that every eleventh bead, or gaued, stood for a Paternoster; the smaller beads, each for an Ave Maria. The full number was 55 or 165. ‘Gaudye of bedes, signeau de paternoster.’—Palsgrave.
'A paire of bedes blacke as sable
She toke and hyng my necke about;
Upon the gaudees all without
Was wryte of gold, pur reposer.'

Gower, Confessio Amantis, f. 190; ed. Pauli, iii. 372.

160. _broche_ = _brooch_, signified, (1) a pin; (2) a breast-pin; (3) a buckle or clasp; (4) a jewel or ornament. It was an ornament common to both sexes. The brooch seems to have been made in the shape of a capital A, surmounted by a crown. See the figure of a silver-gilt brooch in the shape of an A in the Glossary to Fairholt's Costume in England. The 'crowned A' is supposed to represent _Amor_ or _Charity_, the greatest of all the Christian graces. 'Omnia unicit amor;' Vergil, Eclog. x. 69.

163. _Another Nonne_. It was not common for Prioresses to have female chaplains; but Littré gives _chapelaïne_, fem., as an old title of dignity in a nunnery. Moreover, it is an office still held in most Benedictine convents, as is fully explained in a letter written by a modern Nun-Chaplain, and printed in Anglia, iv. 238.

164. The mention of _three priests_ presents some difficulty. To make up the twenty-nine mentioned in l. 24, we only want _one_ priest, and it is afterwards assumed that there was but _one_ priest, viz. the Nonnes Preest, who tells the tale of the Cock and Fox. Chaucer also, in all other cases, supposes that there was but _one_ representative of each class.

The most likely solution is that Chaucer wrote a character of the Second Nun, beginning—

'Another Nonne with hir hadde she
That was hir chapeleyne'—

and that, for some reason, he afterwards suppressed the description. The line left imperfect, as above, may have been filled up, to stop a gap, either by himself (temporarily), or indeed by some one else.

If we are to keep the text (which stands alike in all MSS.), we must take 'wel nyne and twenty' to mean 'at least nine and twenty.'

The letter from the Nun-Chaplain mentioned in the last note shews that an Abbess might have as many as _five_ priests, as well as a chaplain. The difficulty is, merely, how to reconcile this line with l. 24.

165. _a fair_, i. e. a fair one.

_for the maistrie_ is equivalent to the French phrase _pour la maistrie_, which in old medical books 'is applied to such medicines as we usually call sovereign, excellent above all others;' Tyrwhitt. In the Promptorium Parvulum we find 'maystrye, or soverenté, and heyare (higher) honde yn styrye or werre (war): _Dextre_, pl., _victoria, triumphus._' Another copy reads, 'maistri or worship (honour) or the heyer hond,' &c. The phrase _vor the maistre_ is in Rob. of Glouc. l. 11554.
166. venerye, hunting. 'The monks of the middle ages were extremely attached to hunting and field-sports; and this was a frequent subject of complaint with the more austere ecclesiastics, and of satire with the laity.'—Wright.

168. deynlee, dainty, is frequently used by Chaucer in the sense of precious, valuable, rare.

170. Gingen, jingle. Fashionable riders were in the habit of hanging small bells on the bridles and harness of their horses. 'Wycliffe, in his Triloge, inveighs against the priests [of his time] for their 'fair hors, and joly and gay sadeles and bridles ringing by the way;'' Lewes' Wycliffe, p. 121;' cited by Warton, ed. 1840, i. 167. At a much later period Spenser (F. Q. i. 2. 13) makes mention of these 'bells' in his description of a lady's steed:

'Her wanton palfrey all was oversped
With tinsell trappings, woven like a wave,
Whose bridle rung with golden bells and bosses brave.'

See also Warton, as above; and C. T. 14800.

172. Ther as = where that.

173. The reule (rule) of seint Maure (St. Maur) and that of seint Beneyt (St. Benet or Benedict) were the oldest forms of monastic discipline in the Romish Church. St. Maur (Jan. 15) was a disciple of St. Benet (Dec. 4).

175. Harl. MS. reads, 'This ilke monk leet forby hem pace' (leet hem forby him pace?), 'This same monk let them pass by him unobserved,' hem refers to the rules of St. Maur and St. Benet, which were too streit (strict) for this 'lord' or superior of the house, who seems to have preferred a milder sort of discipline. Forby is still used in Scotland for by or past, and occurs frequently in the North English literature of the fourteenth century in the sense of by, past, near.

176. pace. Lansd. MS. reads pace (steps). Tyrwhitt reads trace, path.

177. a pulled hen, lit. a plucked hen; hence, the value of a hen without its feathers; see l. 652. In C. T. 6694, the phrase is 'not worth a hen.' Mr. Earle suggests that pulled = pullet; but the later phrase is also polled hen; (see below). Tyrwhitt says, 'I do not see much force in the epithet pulled;' but adds, in his Glossary—'I have been told since, that a hen whose feathers are pulled, or plucked off, will not lay any eggs.' Becon speaks of a 'polled hen,' i.e. pulled hen, as one unable to fly. 'But to pray at the shrines of his canonized saints, or in places of pilgrimage, where the devil worketh miracles, I would say miracles, but namely at Rome, at Compostella, at Jerusalem, &c., this passeth all. Prayers made in those places with this confidence, that they be the sooner heard and the better accepted by the reason of the places, fly to heaven as it were a polled hen.'—Becon's Works, p. 533; Parker Soc. Another explanation is to suppose pulled to be put for pilled; though these words are properly distinct. Pilled means bald, or scurfy; and hence, perhaps ‘moulted;’ Pylde, or scallyd, depilatus, glabellus;’ Prompt. Parv. Cf. peeled in Isaiah xviii. 2, 7 (also ‘plucked off the hair’ in Isa. 1. 6); Ezek. xxix. 18; Shakespeare, 1 Hen. VI. i. 3. 30.

179. reccheles (in MS. E.) means careless; but, as Professor Ten Brink says, ‘a careless monk’ is not necessarily ‘a monk out of his cloister.’ He proposes to read reset-les, without a resting-place or place of retreat; reset is a common word in M.E. writers for resting-place, abode. Cf. Allit. Poems (ed. Morris), A. 1067:—‘Ther entrez non to take reset;’ ‘No one enters to take up (their) abode there.’ But the reading cloisterles (in MS. Harl.) solves the difficulty; being a coined word, Chaucer goes on to explain it.

179–181. This passage is a literal translation of one from the Decretal of Gratian: ‘Sicut piscis sine aqua caret vita, ita sine monasterio monachus.’ Joinville says, ‘The Scriptures do say that a monk cannot live out of his cloister without falling into deadly sins, any more than a fish can live out of water without dying.’ Cf. P. Plowm. B. x. 292. Moreover, the poet here imitates a passage in Le Testament de Jehan de Meung, ed. Méon, l. 1166:—

‘Qui les voldra trover, si les quiere en leur cloistre . . .
Car ne present le monde la montance d’une oistre.’

182. held, esteemed. Some MSS. read hild or huld.

184. what has here its earliest sense of wherefore, or why.

wood, mad, foolish, is frequently employed by Spenser.

186. swunken, to toil; whence ‘swinked hedger,’ used by Milton (Comus, l. 293). But swunken is, properly, a strong verb.

187. bit, the 3rd pers. sing. pres. of hidden, to command.

187, 183. Austyn. St. Augustine made his cathedral clergy, as far as their duties permitted it, live as strictly as the monkish orders.

189. a pricasour, a hard rider.

192. for no cost, &c., for in no way would he abstain from these sports. Cf. ‘Of my nece gyf ye nou no coost.’—The Sowdone of Babylonye, l. 1721. See note on Knightes Tale, l. 619.

193. purfiled. The M.E. purfil signifies the embroidered or furred hem of a garment, so that purfile is to work upon the edge. Purfiled has also a more extended meaning, and is applied to garments overlaid with gems or other ornaments. ‘Pourfiler d’or, a purfling, tinsell, or overcast with gold thread, &c. Pourfilleure, purfling, a purfling lace or work, bodkin work, tinselling;’ Cotgrave.

194. grys, a sort of costly fur, formerly very much esteemed; but what species of fur it was is not clear; O.F. gris, Rom. de la Rose, 9121, 9307. Some suppose it to be that of the grey squirrel. Such a dress as is here described must have been very expensive. Occlève refers to the fashion in the following lines:—

'But this me thynkethe a grete abusioun,
To see one walke in gownes of scarlet
Twelve yerdes wide, with pendaunt sleues doune
On the grounde, and the furre therin set,
Amountyng unto twenty pound and bet.'

De Regimine Principum, p. 16, ed. Wright.

'His armes two han right ynough to done,
And somewhat more, his sleues up to holde.
The taillours, I trowe, mote hereafter sone
Shape in the felde, they shalle not sprede and folde
On her bord, though they never so fayne wolde,
The clothe that shall be in a gowne wrought.'—Ib. p. 18.

The fur of the grey rabbit was used up to a very late period. 'After him followed two pert apple-squires; the one had a murrey cloth gown on, faced down before with grey coney, and laid thick on the sleeves with lace, which he quaintly bare up, to show his white taffata hose and black silk stockings.'—1592. A Quip for an Upstart Courtier, p. 83, ed. Hindley.

200. in good point = Fr. embonpoint, i.e. in good case.

201. stepe, M. E. steap, does not here mean sunken, but bright, burning, fiery. Mr. Cockayne has illustrated the use of this word in his Seinte Marherete, pp. 9, 108: 'His twa ehnen [semde] steapre pene steorren,' his two eyes seemed brighter than stars. So also: 'schininde and schenre, of 3imstanes steapre then is eni steorre,' shining and clearer, brighter with gems than is any star; St. Katherine, l. 1647.

202. stemed as a forneys of a leed, shone like the fire under a cauldron.

203. botes souple. 'This is part of the description of a smart abbot, by an anonymous writer of the thirteenth century: "Ocreas habebat in cruribus quasi inmatae essent, sine plica porrectas."—Bod. MS. James, n. 6, p. 121.'—Tyrwhitt.

205. for-pyned, tormented, and hence wasted away; from pine, torment, pain; pined also signifies wasted, as in the modern verb pine. The for- is intensive, as in Eng. forswear.

208. Frere, friar. The four orders of mendicant friars mentioned in l. 210 were:—(1) The Dominicans, or friars-preachers, who took up their abode in Oxford in 1221, known as the Black Friars. (2) The Franciscans, founded by St. Francis of Assisi in 1209, and known by the name of Grey Friars. They made their first appearance in England in 1224. (3) The Carmelites, or White Friars. (4) The Augustin (or Austin) Friars. The friar was popular with the mercantile classes on account of his varied attainments and experience. 'Who else so welcome at the houses of men to whom scientific skill and information, scanty as they might be, were yet of no inconsiderable service and attraction. He alone of learned and unlearned possessed some knowledge of foreign countries and their productions; he alone was acquainted with the composition and decomposition of bodies, with the art of distillation, with the construction of machinery, and with the use of the laboratory.' See Professor Brewer's Preface to Monumenta Franciscana, p. xlv.

wantown, sometimes written wantown, literally signifies untrained, and hence wild, brisk, lively. wan- is a common M. E. prefix, equivalent to our un- or dis-, as wanhope, despair; wanbeleve, unbelief; wantruste, distrust: towen or town occurs in M. E. writers for well-behaved, well taught. See Glossary.

merry, pleasant; cf. M. E. merry wether, pleasant weather.

209. limitour was a begging friar to whom was assigned a certain district or limit, within which he was permitted to solicit alms. Hence in later times the verb limit signifies to beg.

'Ther walketh noon but the limitour hymself,
In underneles and in morweninges;
And saith his matins and his holy thinges
As he goth in his limitacioun.'

Wife of Bath's Tale; C. T. 6456.

210. can here signifies knows. See Glossary.

211. daliance and fair langage, gossip and flattery. daliance in M. E. signifies tittle-tattle, gossip. The verb daily signifies not only to loiter or idle, but to play, sport; cf. daly, a die, plaything; Prov. Eng. daily-bones, sheep's trotters. See Glossary.

214. post, pillar or support. See Gal. ii. 9.

220. licentiat. He had a licence from the Pope to give absolution for all sins without being obliged to refer to his bishop. The curate, or parish priest, could not grant absolution in all cases, some of which were reserved for the bishop's decision.

224. pitaunce here signifies a mess of victuals. It originally signified an extraordinary allowance of victuals given to monastics, in addition to their usual commons, and was afterwards applied to the whole allowance of food for a single person, or to a small portion of anything.

226. y-shrive = y-shriven, confessed, shriven. The final n is dropped.

233. tippet, hood, cuculla, or cowl, which seems to have been used as a pocket. 'When the Order [of Franciscans] degenerated, the friar combined with the spiritual functions the occupation of pedlar, huxter, mountebank, and quack doctor.' (Brewer.) In an old poem printed in Professor Brewer's Monumenta Franciscana, we have the following allusion to the dealings of the friars:—
'For thai have noght to lyve by, they wandren here and there,
And dele with dyvers marche, right as thai pedlers were.
Thei dele with pynnes and kuyves, ther thai are haunted
With gyrdles, gloves for wenches and wyves, till.'

See the chapter on Bride-knives in Brand's Popular Antiquities.
236. rote is a kind of fiddle or 'croud,' not a hurdy-gurdy.
237. yeddynge, songs embodying some popular tales or romances.
239. champion.

'The regent was there that daye a lion,
And fought in armes like any champion.'

Hardyng, p. 393.

241. tappestere, a female tapster. In olden times the retailers of beer, and for the most part the brewers also, appear to have been females.
Of. 'the tapp of Taystocke,' and 'the tapsters potte' (Thrysytes, ed.
Roxb. Club, p. 68). The -stere or -ster as a feminine affix (though in the fourteenth century it is not always or regularly used as such) occurs in M.E. brewstere, webbestere; Eng. spinster. In huckster, maltster, songster, this affix has acquired the meaning of an agent; and in youngster, gamester, punster, &c., it implies contempt. See Skeat, Principles of Etymology, § 238.

242. lazar, a leper; from Lazarus, in the parable of Dives and Lazarus; hence lazarette, a hospital for lepers, a lazar-house.

246. 'It is not becoming, it may not advance (profit) to deal with (associate with) such poor people.'

248. riche, i.e. rich people.

250. 'Courteous he was, and humble in offering his services.'

252, 253. Between these two lines the Hengwrt MS. inserts the follow-ning two lines, which are omitted by the Harl., Corpus, Cambridge, Petworth, Ellesmere, and Lansdowne MSS.:

'And yaf a certeyn ferme for the graunt
Noon of his bretheren cam ther in his haunt.'

Tyrwhitt inserts these two lines; hence a slight difference in the methods of numbering the lines after this line.

253. sho. It has been proposed to read sou (a halfpenny, as we now should say), but the best MSS. do not countenance any such reading; which would (in fact) give a false rime. The friars do not seem to have been above taking small articles. 'Ever be giving of somewhat, though it be but a cheese or a piece of bacon, to the holy order of St. Francis, or to any other of my [Antichrist’s] friars, monks, canons, &c. Holy Church refusing nothing, but gladly taketh whatsoever cometh.'—Becon’s Acts of Christ and of Antichrist, p. 531; Parker Society. So also 'not worth his olde sho'; C. T. 6290. Cf.

'For had a man slayne al his kynne,
Go shryve him at a frere,
And for lesse then a payre of shone,
He wyl asoile him clene and sone.'

Polit. Poems, ed. Wright, i. 266.

254. In principio. 7 'Tyrwhitt, in his note on the line, leaves it doubt-ful whether these words refer to the beginning of St. John's Gospel, the beginning of Genesis, or some passage in the conclusion of the Mass. (He notes that the words are also used in l. 15169.) The following passage from Tyndale sets the question at rest: "And where he [the priest] should cross himself, to be armed and to make himself strong to bear the cross with Christ, he crosseth himself to drive the cross from him; and blesseth himself with a cross from the cross. And if he leave it undone, he thinketh it no small sin, and that God is highly displeased with him, and if any misfortune chance, thinketh it is therefore; which is also idolatry, and not God's word . . . Such is the limiter's saying of 'In principio erat verbum,' from house to house."—Tyndale, vol. iii. pp. 61, 62, in his Answer to Sir T. More's Dialogue, 1530, edited for the Parker Society, by the Rev. H. Walter, B.D. 5—F. J. Furnivall, in Temp. Pref. to the Six-Text edit. of Chaucer, p. 93. Hence the reference is to John i. 1.

256. purchas = proceeds of his begging. 2 What he acquired in this way was greater than his rent or income.

We find also: 'My purchas is theffect of al my rente;' C. T. 7033.

'To wynnen is always myn entente,
My purchace is bettir than my rente.'

Romaunt of the Rose, l. 6840.

Here the F. original has (l. 11760)—'Miex vaunt mes porchas que ma rente.'

257. as it were right (Elles. &c.); and pleyen as (Harl.).

258. love-dayes. 'Love-days (dies amoris) were days fixed for settling differences by umpire, without having recourse to law or violence. The ecclesiastics seem generally to have had the principal share in the management of these transactions, which, throughout the Vision of Piers Ploughman, appear to be censured as the means of hindering justice and of enriching the clergy.'—Wright's Vision of Piers Ploughman, vol. ii. P. 535.

'Ac now is Religion a rydere, and a rennere aboute,
A ledere of love-dayes,' &c.

Piers Ploughman, A. xi. 208, ed. Skeat; see also note to P. Pl. ed. Skeat, B. iii. 196. (Mr. Kitchin suggests that these private days of peace are analogous to the Treuga Dei, truce of God, so often proclaimed by bishops between A. D. 1000 and 1300. This truce lasted from 3 p.m. on Saturday to 6 a.m. on Monday. But all the evidence shews that the love-day was a totally different thing.)
260. Cope, a priest’s vestment; a cloak forming a semicircle when laid flat; the semi-cope (l. 264) was a short cloak or cape.

270. A forked beard. In the time of Edward III forked beards were the fashion among the franklins and bourgeoisie, according to the old custom before the Conquest. See Fairholt’s Costume in England, fig. 30.

276. Were kept, should be guarded; so that he should not suffer from pirates or privateers. The old subsidy of tonnage and poundage was given to the king for the safeguard and custody of the sea.

‘The see wel kept, it must bee doo for drede.’ Hakluyt, i. 206 [marked 204]; cited from A Libell of English Policie.

For any thing, i.e. for fear of anything; for = for fear of. ‘Lyons folde up their nailes when they are in their dennes for wearing them in the earth and neede not. Eagles draw in their tallants as they sit in their nestes, for blunting them there amonst drosse: And I will caste Ancor in these abuses, rest my Barke in the simple roade, for grating my wits upon needelesse shelues.’—Gosson, The Schoole of Abuse, p. 54, ed. Arber.

277. Middelburgh and Orewelle. ‘Middleburgh is still a well-known port of the island of Walcheren, in the Netherlands, almost immediately opposite Harwich, beside which are the estuaries of the rivers Stoure and Orwell. This spot was formerly known as the port of Orwell or Orewelle.’—Saunders, p. 229.

278. He well knew how to make a profit by the exchange of his crowns in the different money-markets of Europe. Sheeldes are French crowns (écus), from their having on one side the figure of a shield.

279. His wit bisette, employed his knowledge to the best advantage. Bisette = used, employed. Cf. Piers Plowman, ed. Skeat, B. v. 297:—

‘And if thou wite (know) never to whiche, ne whom to restitue
[the goods gotten wrongfully]
Bere it to the bisschop, and bidde hym of his grace,
Bissette it hymselue, as best is for thi soule.’

281, 282. ‘So respectably did he order his bargains and agreements in borrowing money.’

284. Noot = ne + wot, know not; so nost = ne + wost, (thou) knowest not.

285. Clerk, a university student, a scholar preparing for the priesthood. It also signifies a man of learning, a man in holy orders. See Anstey’s Munimenta Academica for much interesting information on early Oxford life and studies.

Oxenford, Oxford, as if the ford of the oxen (A.S. Oxnaford); and it has not been proved that this etymology is wrong.

287. As... as. Some MSS. read also... as = as... as.

290. ‘His uppermost short cloak of coarse cloth.’

297. Philosophre is used in a double sense; it sometimes meant an alchemist, as in C. T. Group G, l. 1427. The clerk knew philosophy, but he was no alchemist, and so had but little gold.

301. Chaucer often imitates his own lines. He here imitates Troil. iv. 1174—‘And pitously gan for the soule preye.’

302. yaf him. An allusion to the common practice, at this period, of poor scholars in the Universities, who wandered about the country begging, to raise money to support them in their studies. In a poem in MS. Lansd. 762, the husbandman, complaining of the many burdens he supports in taxes to the court, payments to the church, and charitable contributions of different kinds, enumerates among the latter the alms to scholars:

‘Than commeth clerkys of Oxford, and make their mone,
To her scole-hire they most have money.’
See God spede the Plough, p. 71, in Pierce the Ploughman’s Crede, ed. Skeat.

scoleye, to attend school. It is used in the same sense by Lydgate.

307. Souninge in, tending to. Cf. our phrase, ‘it sounds bad.’
‘That day (Domesday) sal (shall) na man be excused
Of nathyng that he wrang (wrong) here used,
That soundes in ille on any manere,
Of whilk (which) he was never delyverd here.’

Pricke of Conscience, p. 164, 1. 6079.
Ascham evidently plays upon the word in the following passage:—
‘Some siren shall sing him a song sweete in tune, but sounding in the ende to his utter destruction.’—The Scholemaster, p. 72, ed. Mayor, 1863; or ed. Arber, p. 74.

310. at the parvys, at the church-porch, or portico of St. Paul’s, where the lawyers were wont to meet for consultation. Cf. Parvisum, the church-porch of St. Mary’s, Oxford, where the examinations used to be held. See Warton, ed. 1871, ii. 377; Todd, Illustrations, p. 245; Saunders, p. 164.

320. Purchasing, conveyancing; infect, invalid. ‘The learned Sergeant was clever enough to untie any entail, and pass the property as estate in fee simple.’—W. H. H. Kelke, in N. and Q. 5 S. vi. 487.

323, 324. ‘He was well acquainted with all the legal cases and decisions (or decrees) which had been ruled in the courts of law since the time of William the Conqueror.’ The Harl. MS. reads, of King Will were falle (=were fallen, had befallen or occurred).

326. pinch at, find fault with. Its original meaning was to act in a niggardly manner (as in the modern verb pinch), to deny oneself common necessaries; from which sprang a secondary meaning, to deny or refuse the courtesy or praise due to another, and hence to blame. Palsgrave uses the phrase, ‘I pynche courtaysye (as one that doth that is nyce of condyscons, Ie fays le nyce).’
328. medlee cote, a coat of mixed stuff or colour.
329. Gird, which is the reading in the Harl. MS., is the same as girt, girded. The past tense would be girde.

ceint of silk, &c., a girdle of silk with small ornaments. The barres were called clouxe in French, and were the usual ornaments of a girdle (Lat. clavus). They were perforated to allow the tongue of the buckle to pass through them. ‘Originally they were attached transversely to the wide tissue of which the girdle was formed, but subsequently were round or square, or fashioned like the heads of lions, and similar devices, the name of barre being still retained, though improperly.’—Way, in Promptorium Parvulorum; s.v. barre.

331. Fortescue describes a franklin to be a pater familias—magnis ditatus possessionibus. The following extract from John Russell’s Boke of Nurture (p. 170, ed. Furnivall) gives us a good idea of a franklin’s feast:

`A Franklen may make a feste Improberabille, brawne with mustard is concordable, Beef or motoun stewed seruysable, Boyled Chykoun or capoun agreeable, Rosted goose & pykke fulle profitable, Capoun / Bakemete, or Custade Costable, Perfore stuffe of household is behoveable, Mortrowes or Iusselle ar delectable Thanne veel, lambe, kyd, or cony, Chykoun or piggeon rosted tendurly, Penne followyng frytowsr, & a leche lovely; Suche seruysse in sesoun is fulle semely Thenne appuls & peris with spices delicately Aftur pe terme of pe yere fulle deynteithly, Spised cakes and wafurs worthily, With bragot & methe, pus men may merly bakoun serued with pesoun, conventyen for pe soun; whenne eggis & crayme be gesoun (scarce).

for the second course by resoun. bakemetes or dow-cettes with alle. to serue with bothe chambur and halle. with bred and chese to calle. plesse welle bothe gret & smalle.’`

334. a sop in wyn. See note to l. 147.

340. ‘St. Julian was eminent for providing his votaries with good lodgings and accommodation of all sorts. [See Chambers’ Book of Days, ii. 388.] In the title of his legend, Bodl. MS. 1596, fol. 4, he is called “*St. Julian the gode herberjou*r” (St. Julian the good harbourer). It ends thus:

“Therfore yet to this day thei that over lond wende (go), Thei biddeth (pray) Seint Julian anon that gode herborw (lodging) he hem sende,
And Seint Julianes Paternoster ofte seggeth (say) also For his fader soule and his moderes, that he hem bringe therto.”

Of the virtue of St. Julian’s Paternoster see the Decameron, Day 2, nov. 2.'—Tyrwhitt. His day is Jan. 9. See also Gesta Romanorum, ed. Swan; tale 18.
THE PROLOGUE.

342. envyned, stored with wine. 'Cotgrave has preserved the French word enviné in the same sense.'—Tyrwhitt.

343. bake mete = baked meat; the old past participle of bake was baken. Baked meats = meats baked in coffins (pies).

345. The verb snewed is usually explained as a metaphor from snowing; but the M. E. snewe, like the Prov. Eng. snie or snive, also signifies to abound, swarm. Camb. MS. reads 'It snowede in his mouth of mete and drynk.' Cf. 'He was with yiftes [presents] all bisnewed;' Gower, C. A. iii. 51.

349. mewe. The mewe was the place where the hawks were kept while moulting; it was afterwards applied to the coop wherein fowl were fattened, and lastly to a place of confinement or secrecy.

350. stewe, fish-pond. 'To insure a supply of fish, stew-ponds were attached to the manors, and few monasteries were without them; the moat around the castle was often converted into a fish-pond, and well stored with luce, carp, or tench.'—Our English Home, p. 65.

351. Wo was his cook, woeful or sad was his cook. We only use wo or woe as a substantive. Cf. 'Who was woo but Olyvere then.'—Sowdone of Babyloynye, l. 1271. 'I am woe for 't;' Tempest, v. 1. 139. Rob. of Brunne (Handling Synne, 7250) says that a rich man's cook 'may no day Greythe hym hys mete to pay.'

351, 352. sauce—Pynaunt is like the modern phrase sauce piquant. 'Our forefathers were great lovers of 'piquant sauce.' They made it of expensive condiments and rare spices. . . In the statute of Henry III to restrain high living, the use of sauce is prohibited unless it could be procured at a very moderate cost.'—Our English Home, p. 62.

353. table dormant. 'Previous to the fourteenth century a pair of common wooden trestles and a rough plank was deemed a table sufficient for the great hall. . . Tables, with a board attached to a frame, were introduced about the time of Chaucer, and, from remaining in the hall, were regarded as indications of a ready hospitality.'—Our English Home, p. 29.

355. sessions. At the Sessions of the Peace. Cf. 'At Sessions and at Sises we bare the stroke and swaye.'—Higgins's Mirrour for Magistrates, ed. 1571, p. 2.

357. aulas or anelace. Speght defines this word as a falchion, or wood-knife. It was, however, a short two-edged knife or dagger usually worn at the girdle, broad at the hilt and tapering to a point. See Murray's New Eng. Dictionary; Liber Albus, p. 75; Knight, Pict. Hist. of England, i. 872.

gipser was properly a pouch or budget used in hawking, &c., but commonly worn by the merchant, or with any secular attire.—(Way.)
358. Heng (or Hing in some MSS.), the past tense of hongen or hangen, to hang.

morne mylk = morning milk.

359. schirrere, the reve of a shire, governor of a county; our modern word sheriff.

countour, O. Fr. comptour, an accountant, a person who audited accounts or received money in charge, &c.; ranked with pleaders in Riley's Memorials of London, p. 58. It occurs in Rob. of Gloucester, l. 11153. In the Book of the Duch. 435, it simply means 'accountant.'

360. vavasour, or vavaser, originally a sub-vassal or tenant of a vassal or tenant of the king's, one who held his lands in fealty. Tyrwhitt says 'it should be understood to mean the whole class of middling landholders.' See Lacroix, Military Life of Middle Ages, p. 9. Spelt favasour in King Alisaunnder, ed. Weber, l. 3827.

361. Haberdassher. Haberdashers were of two kinds: haberdashers of small wares—sellers of needles, tapes, buttons, &c.; and haberdashers of hats.

362. Webbe, properly a male weaver; webstere was the female weaver, but there appears to have been some confusion in the use of the suffixes -e and -stere (see Piers Plowman, ed. Skeat, B. v. 215), 'mi wyf was a webbe.'

363. livere, livery. Under the term 'livery' was included whatever was dispensed (delivered) by the lord to his officials or domestics annually or at certain seasons, whether money, victuals, or garments. The term chiefly denoted external marks of distinction, such as the roba estivalis and hiemalis, given to the officers and retainers of the court, as appears by the Wardrobe Book, 28 Edw. I, p. 310, and the Household Ordinances. The practice of distributing such tokens of general adherence to the service or interests of the individual who granted them, for the maintenance of any private quarrel, was carried to an injurious extent during the reigns of Edward III and Richard II, and was forbidden by several statutes, which allowed liversies to be borne only by menials, or the members of guilds. (See Stat. of Realm, ii. pp. 3274, 93, 156, 167.) The 'liverie des chaperons,' often mentioned in these documents, was a hood or tippet, which being of a colour strongly contrasted to that of the garment, was a kind of livery much in fashion, and well adapted to serve as a distinctive mark. This, in later times, assumed the form of a round cap, to which was appended the long liripipium, which might be rolled around the head, but more commonly was worn hanging over the arm; and vestiges of it may still be traced in the dress of civic liverymen. The Stat. 7 Hen. IV expressly permits the adoption of such distinctive dress by fraternities and 'les gentz de mestere,' the trades of the cities of the realm, being ordained with good intent; and to this prevalent usage Chaucer alludes when he describes five artificers of various callings, who joined the pilgrimage, clothed all ‘in o lyveré of a solempne and greet fraternité.’ (All from Way, note to Prompt. Parv., p. 308.)

And they were clothed alle (Elles. &c.); Weren with us eeke clothed (Harl.).

365. aphyked signifies cleaned, trimmed. Bullinger, in his fortieth sermon on the Apocalypse, inveighing against the Roman clergy, says, ‘They be commed, and piked, and very finely appareled.’

366. y-chaped, having chapes (i.e. plates or caps of metal at the point of the sheath or scabbard). Tradesmen and mechanics were prohibited from using knives adorned with silver, gold, or precious stones. So that Chaucer’s pilgrims were of a superior estate, as is indicated in l. 369.

370. deys, dese, or dais (Fr. deis or daix, whence Low Lat. dasium), is used to denote the raised platform which was always found at the upper end of a hall, the table or seat of distinction placed thereon; it also meant the tester (Lat. discus) with hanging drapery, called also seler, cloth of estate, and in French ciel, suspended over it.

371. that he can, that he knows; as he couthe, as he knew how. See l. 390.

372. shaply, adapted, fit. It sometimes signifies comely, of good shape or form.

373. ‘For they had sufficient property and income’ (to entitle them to undertake the office of alderman).

377. And gon to vigilyes al bifoire. ‘It was the manner in times past, upon festival evens, called vigiliae, for parishioners to meet in their church-houses, or church-yards, and there to have a drinking-fit for the time. Here they used to end many quarrels betwixt neighbour and neighbour. Hither came the wives in comely manner, and they which were of the better sort had their mantles carried with them, as well as for show as to keep them from cold at table.’—Speght.

379. for the nones = for the nonce; this expression, if grammatically written, would be for then once, M. E. for þan anes, for the once, i.e. for the occasion; where the adv. anes (orig. a gen. form) is used as if it were a sb. in the dat. case. Such phrases as at the nale, at the noke = at the ale, at the oak, contain also a remnant of the dative case (then) of the article: for then or for þan was originally for þam. Cf. M. E. atte = atten = at þan = at þam.

381. poudre-marchaunt tart is a sharp (tart) kind of flavouring powder, twice mentioned in Household Ordinances and Receipts (Soc. Antiq. 1790) at pp. 425, 434: ‘Do therto poudre marchant,’ and ‘do thi flessh therto, and gode herbes and poudre marchaunt, and let hit well stew.’—Notes and Queries, Fourth Series, iii. 180.
In the Boke of Nurture (Harl. MS. 4011), i. 533, we read that 'Mustard is meete for brawne, beef, or powdered motoun;
Verdius to boyled capoun, veel, chiken, or bakoun;

Rooster beef and goos with garlek, vinegre, or pepur;
Gyner sawce to lambe, to kyd, pigge, or fawn;
To feysand (pheasant), partriche, or cony, mustard with the sugere.'

'Tart and galangale, which Chaucer, pre-eminentest, economionseth above all junqueties or confectionaries whatsoever.—Nash's Lenten Stuff, p. 36, ed. Hindley. galangale is the root of sweet cyperus. Harman (ed. Strother) notices three varieties: Cyperus rotundus, Galanga major, Galanga minor; Babees Book, ed. Furnivall, pp. 152, 216. See Beaumont and Fletcher's Bloody Brother, ii. 2 (near the end); Marco Polo, ed. Yule, ii. 181; Prompt. Parv., p. 185, note 4; and Rogers, Hist. of Agriculture and Prices, i. 629.

382. London ale. London ale was famous as early as the time of Henry III, and much higher priced than any other ale; cf. C. T. 3142.

384. mortreus or mortreves. There were two kinds of 'mortrews,' 'mortrewes de chare' and 'mortrewes de fysshe.' The first was a kind of soup in which chickens, fresh pork, crumbs of bread, yolks of eggs, and saffron formed the chief ingredients; the second kind was a soup containing the roe (or milt) and liver of fish, bread, pepper, ale. The ingredients were first stamped or brayed in a mortar, whence it probably derived its name. Lord Bacon (Nat. Hist. i. 48) speaks of 'a mortresse made with the brawne of capons stamped and strained.' See Babees Book, pp. 151, 170, 172.

386. mormal, a cancer or gangrene. Ben Jonson, in imitation of this passage, has described a cook with an 'old mortmal on his skin;' Sad Shepherd, act ii. sc. 2. Palsgrave gives—'Mormal, a sore.' In MS. Oo. i. 20, last leaf, in the Camb. Univ. Library, are notices of remedies 'Por la maladie que est apele malum mortuum.' It says that it comes from melancholy, and shows a broad hard scurf or crust. Lydgate speaks of 'Goutes, mormalles, horrible to the sight;' Fall of Princes, bk. vii. c. 10.

388. by weste = westward. A good old expression, which was once very common as late as the 16th century. Cf.

'And made hym kyng agayne by north and south.'
Hardyng's Chronicle, p. 69.

389. Dartmouth was once a very considerable port; see Essays on Chaucer, p. 456.

390. rounce, a common hackney horse, a nag. Cf. Rozinante. 'Rocinante—significativo de lo que habia sido cuando fué rocin, antes de lo que ahora era.'—Don Quijote, cap. 1. 'From Rozin, a drudge-horse, and ane, before.'—Jarvis’s note. "A Runcina cost £5 10s. at Burton in 1262." (Rogers.)

391. a gowne of falding, a gown (robe) of coarse cloth. The term falding signifies 'a kind of frieze or rough-napped cloth,' which was probably 'supplied from the North of Europe, and identical with the woolen wrappers of which Hermoldus speaks, "quos nos appellamus Faldones."'—Way. 'Falding was a coarse serge cloth, very rough and durable,' &c.; Essays on Chaucer, p. 458.

394. the hote somer. 'Perhaps this is a reference to the summer of the year 1351, which was long remembered as the dry and hot summer.'—Wright. There was another such summer in 1370, much nearer the date of this Prologue.

396–398. 'Very many a draught of wine had he drawn (stolen away or carried off from Bordeaux, cask and all) while the chapman (merchant or supercargo to whom the wine belonged) was asleep; for he paid no regard to any conscientious scruples.'

399. hyer hond, upper hand.

400. 'He sent them home to wherever they came from by water,' i.e. he made them 'walk the plank,' as it used to be called; or, in plain English, threw them overboard, to sink or swim. However cruel this may seem now, it was probably a common practice. 'This battle (the sea-fight off Sluys) was very murderous and horrible. Combats at sea are more destructive and obstinate than upon land;' Froissart's Chron. bk. i. c. 50.

'Fone (few) left Jai olie (alive), bot did tham to lepe (made them leap overboard) . . .

'To wade war tho wrecches casten in the brim,
The kaitfs come out of France at lere tham to swim;' i.e. those wretches were cast into the surf to wade (if they could); the caitiffs came out of France, to teach themselves to swim.—Minot’s Poems, ed. Hall, p. 16. And see Essays on Chaucer, p. 460.

403. lodemenage, pilotage. A pilot was called a lodesman; see Way’s note in Prompt. Parv. p. 310; Riley’s Memorials of London, p. 655; Chaucer’s Legend of Good Women, 1486; Furnivall’s Temporary Preface, p. 98; Essays on Chaucer, pp. 480, 481, 484. At a later period lodesman meant any guide; Monk of Evesham, ed. Arber, p. 106.

409. cryke, creek, harbour, port.

410. We find actual mention of a vessel called the Mandelayne belonging to the port of Dartmouth, in the years 1379 and 1386; see Essays on Chaucer, p. 484. See also N. & Q. 6 S. xii. 47.

411. With us ther was (Elles. &c.); Ther was also (Harl.).

414. astronomye, (really) astrology. See Saunders on Chaucer, p. 175.
415, 416. kepte, watched. The houres are the astrological hours. He carefully watched for a favourable star in the ascendant. 'A great portion of the medical science of the middle ages depended upon astrological and other superstitious observances.'—Wright. Cf. Nonne Preestes Tale, l. 135.

416. magik naturel. Chaucer alludes to the same practices in the House of Fame, bk. iii. ll. 169-180:—

'Ther saugh I pleyen jugelours

And clerkes eek, which conne wel
Al this magyke naturel,
That craftely doon her entente
To make, in certeyn ascendentes,
Images, lo! through which magyke,
To make a man ben hool or syke.'

417. The ascendent is the point of the zodiacal circle which happens to be ascending above the horizon at a given moment, such as the moment of birth. Upon it depended the drawing out of a man's horoscope, which represented the aspect of the heavens at some given critical moment. The moment, in the present case, is that for making images. It was believed that images of men and animals could be made of certain substances and at certain times, and could be so treated as to cause good or evil to a patient, by means of magical and planetary influences. See Cornelius Agrippa, De Occulta Philosophia, lib. ii. capp. 35-47. Cf. Horace, Sat. i. 8. 30; Ovid, Heroid. vi. 91. In Norton's Ordinall, printed in Ashmole's Theatrum Chemicum, p. 60, it is said that astrologers

'With Astrologie joyne Elements also,

Cf. Notes to Man of Law's Tale, 312; Squire's Tale, 352.

420. These are the four humours, hot, cold, dry, moist. Milton, Par. Lost, ii. 898. Diseases were supposed to be caused by an undue excess of some one humour.

424. his bote, his remedy.

426. drogges. MS. Harl. dragges; the rest drogges, drugges, drugs. The Promptorium Parvulorum has dragge, dragetum; and Cotgrave defines dragée (the French form of the word dragge) as 'a kind of digestive powder prescribed unto weak stomachs after meat, and hence any jonkets, comfits, or sweetmeats served in the last course for stomach-closers.' Old English writers occasionally employ dragy in the sense of a small comfit, and dragoir, dragenall, a vessel for dragges.

429-434. Read th'oldë. 'The authors mentioned here wrote the chief medical text-books of the middle ages. Rufus was a Greek physician.
of Ephesus, of the age of Trajan; Haly, Serapion, and Avicen were Arabian physicians and astronomers of the eleventh century; Rphasis was a Spanish Arab of the tenth century; and Averroes was a Moorish scholar who flourished in Morocco in the twelfth century. Johannes Damascenus was also an Arabian physician, but of a much earlier date (probably of the ninth century); Constantius Afer, a native of Carthage, and afterwards a monk of Monte Cassino, was one of the founders of the school of Salerno—he lived at the end of the eleventh century; Bernardus Gordonius, professor of medicine at Montpellier, appears to have been Chancer's contemporary; John Gatisden was a distinguished physician of Oxford in the earlier half of the fourteenth century; Gilbertyn is supposed by Warton to be the celebrated Gilbertus Anglicus. The names of Hippocrates and Galen were, in the middle ages, always (or nearly always) spelt Ypocrates and Galienus.—Wright. \( \text{Æ} \)sculapius, god of medicine, was fabled to be the son of Apollo. Dioscorides was a Greek physician of the second century. Cf. Book of the Duchess, 572. Cf. 'Ippocrate, Avicenna, e Galieno, Averrois,' &c.; Dante, Inf. iv. 143. And see the long note in Warton, 1871, ii. 368.

'And where ben my gownses of scarlet,
Sangweyn, murrey, and blewes sadde and light,
Grenes also, and the faire vyolet,
Hors and harneys, fresshe and lusty in sight?'

440. \( \text{taffata} \) (or \( \text{taffety} \)), a sort of thin silk.
\( \text{sendal} \) (or \( \text{cendal} \)), a kind of rich thin silk used for lining, very highly esteemed. Thynne says—'a thynne stuffe lyke sarcenett.' Palsgrave however has 'cendell, thynme lynnen, sendal.' See Piers Plowman, B. vi. 11; Marco Polo, ed. Yule (see the index).

441. \( \text{esy of distence} \), moderate in his expenditure.

442. \( \text{wan in pestilence} \), acquired during the pestilence. This is an allusion to the great pestilence of the years 1348, 1349; or to the later pestilences in 1362, 1369, and 1376. See Introd. to Piers Plowman (Clarendon Press Series); table at end of Preface.

443. \( \text{For} = \) because, seeing that. It was supposed that \( \text{aurum potabile} \) was a remedy in some cases. '\( \text{Aurum potabile est auri oleum vel in liquorem redactum} \);' Ducange. The actual reference is, probably, to Les Remonstrances de Nature, by Jean de Meun, ii. 979, 980, &c.; 'C'est le fin et bon or potable, L'humide radical notable; C'est souveraine medicine ;' and the author goes on to refer us to Ecclus. xxxviii. 4— 'The Lord hath created medicines out of the earth; and he that is wise will not abhor them.' Hence the Doctor would not abhor gold. And further—'C'est medicine \( \text{cordiale} \);' ib. 1029.

ten pound. 'Ornaments of golden net-work were worn at this time at the side of the face, thickest just beside the eyes, which formed, in reality, part of the caul.'—Pierce the Ploughman's Crede, note to l. 84, ed. Skeat. Cf. the following amusing description of the head-dress of Elizabethan dames from 'The Anatomy of Abuses,' 1585: 'They have also other ornamentes besides these to furnishe forthe their ingenio-uses heads, whiche they call (as I remember) caules, made netwise, to the ende, as I think, that the clothe of golde, clothe of silver, or els tinsell, (for that is the worst wherewith their heads are covered and attired withall underneath their caules), may the better appeare, and shew itselfe in the bravest maner; so that a man that seeth them (their heads glister and shine in such sorte) would thinke them to have golden heads . . .
Then have they petticotes (see Prol., ll. 455, 472) of the beste clothe that can be made. And sometimes they are not of clothe neither, for that is thought too base, but of scarlet, grograine, taffatie, silke and such like, fringed about the skirtes, with silke fringe, of chaungeable colour. But whiche is more venye, of whatsoever their petticotes be, yet must they have kirtles (for so they call them) either of silke, velvett, grograine, taffatie, satten or scarlet, bordered with gardes, lace, fringes, and I cannot tell what besides . . . Their nether-stockes, in like maner, are either of silke, iearnsey, worsted, crewell, or, at least, of as fine yearne, thread or cloth as is possible to be hadde; yea, they are not ashamed to weare hoase all kinde of chaungeable colours, as green, red, 457. moiste, soft—not 'as hard as old boots.'
460. chirche-dore. The priest married the couple at the church-porch, and immediately afterwards proceeded to the altar to celebrate mass, at which the newly-married persons communicated. See Warton, Hist. E. Poetry, 1871, ii. 366, note 1; Anglia, vi. 106; cf. C. T. 5588.
461. Withouten = besides. Other campaigne, other lovers. This expression (copied from Le Rom. de la Rose, l. 12985—'autre companie') makes it quite certain that the character of the Wife of Bath is copied, in some respects, from that of La Vieille in the Roman de la Rose.
465. Boloigne. Cf. 'I will have you swear by our dear Lady of Boulogne;' Gammer Gurton’s Needle, Act 2, se. 2. An image of the virgin was preserved at Boulogne. See Heylin’s Survey of France, p. 193, ed. 1656 (quoted in the above, ed. Hazlitt).
466. In Galice (Galicia), at the shrine of St. James of Compostella, a famous resort of pilgrims in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. As the legend goes, the body of St. James the Apostle was supposed to have been carried in a ship without a rudder to Galicia, and preserved at Compostella. See Piers Plowman, A. iv. 109, 110, and note to B. Prol. 47.

Coloigne. At Cologne, where the bones of the Three Kings or Wise Men of the East, Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar, are said to be preserved. See Coryat’s Crudities; Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 751.
468. Gat-tothed = gat-toothed, meaning gap-toothed, having teeth wide apart or separated from one another. A gat is an opening, and is allied to E. gate. Cf. Icel. gat, a hole, as in skrár-gat, a key-hole; O. Sax. gat, an opening, as in núdlon gat, the eye of a needle. Hexham’s Dutch Dict. has: ‘een Gat, a hole; het Gat van een Net, the hole of a net; also een Gat, a dore, or a gate.’ The Friesic gat, Dan. gat, and Norweg. gat all mean a hole, or a gap. Very similar is the use of the Shropshire glat, a gap in a hedge, also a gap in the mouth caused by loss of teeth. Example: ‘Dick, yo’ bin a flirt; I thought yo’ wun (were) gwein to marry the cook at the paasn’s. Aye, but ’er ’d gotten too many glats i’ the mouth for me;’ Miss Jackson’s Shropshire Word-book. Speght reads cat-tothed. Gat-toothed has also been explained as goat-toothed, lascivious, but the word goat appears as goot in Chaucer. ‘Famine—the gap-toothed elf;’ Golding’s Ovid, b. 8; leaf 105. Holland uses it for tut-mouthed = having the lower jaw projecting beyond the upper. See Trench’s ‘On some Deficiencies in our Eng. Dictionaries,’ p. 42. It occurs again, C. T. 6185.
472. foot-mantel. Tyrwhitt supposes this to be a sort of riding-petticoat, such as is now used by market-women. It is clearly shewn, as a blue outer skirt, in the drawing in the Ellesmere MS. At a later time it was called a safe-guard, and its use was to keep the gown clean.

476. the olde daunce, the old game, or custom. Cotgrave has the French phrase, 'Elle scat asses de la vieille dause.' Cf. wrechit dans, Launcelot of the Laik, l. 1321, and loves daunce, Chaucer (Aldine), vol. iv. p. 198, l. 4. The phrase is borrowed from Le Roman de la Rose, l. 3946—'Qu'el scet toute la vieule dance;' E. version, l. 4300—'For she knew alle the olde daunce.' It occurs again; Troil. iii. 695.

478. Personn of a ton, the parson or parish priest. Chaucer, in his description of the parson, contrasts the piety and industry of the secular clergy with the wickedness and laziness of the religious orders or monks. See Dryden's 'Character of a Good Parson.'

486. 'He was very loath to excommunicate those who failed to pay the tithes that were due to him.' 'Refusal to pay tithes was punishable with the lesser excommunication;' Bell.

489. offering, the voluntary contributions of his parishioners.

substance, income derived from his benefice.

492. lafte not, left not, ceased not.

502. lewed, unlearned, ignorant. Lewed or lewd originally signified the people, laity, as opposed to the clergy; the modern sense of the word is not common in Middle English.

503-504. St. John Chrysostom also saith, 'It is a great shame for priests, when laymen be found faithfuller and more righteous than they.' —Becon's Invective against Swearing, p. 336.

507. to kyre. The parson did not leave his parish duties to be performed by a strange curate, that he might have leisure to seek a chantry in St. Paul's. See Piers Plowman, B-text, ProL l. 83: and cf. the following:—

'Fulle many men knowe I that yane and gape
After some fatte and riche benefice;
Chirche ne prebende unneth the hem may escape,
But they as blive it hent up and trice.

Adayes now, my sone, as men may see,

510. chaunterie, chantry, an endowment for the payment of a priest to sing mass agreeably to the appointment of the founder.

517. daungerous, not affable, difficult to approach. digne, full of dignity; hence, repellent. 'She was as digne as water in a ditch;' C. T.
3962; because stagnant water keeps people at a distance.

519. fairnesse, i.e. by leading a fair or good life. The Harleian MS.
has clenesses, that is, a life of purity.

525. wayted after, looked for. See line 571. Cf. Knightes Tale, line 364.

526. spyced conscience; so also in C. T. 6017. Spiced here seems to signify, says Tyrwhitt, nice, scrupulous. It occurs in the Mad Lover, act iii, sc. 1, by Beaumont and Fletcher. When Cleanthe offers a purse, the priestess says,—

'Fy! no corruption .

Cle. Take it, it is yours;

Be not so spiced; 'tis good gold;

And goodness is no gall to th' conscience.'

'Under pretence of spiced holinesse?—Tract dated 1594, ap. Todd's

534. though him gamed or smerte, though it was pleasant or unpleasant to him.

541. mere. People of quality would not ride upon a mare.

548. the ram. This was the usual prize at wrestling-matches. See Ch. II., note to Group B, l. 1931.

549. a thikke knarre, a thickly knotted (fellow), i.e. a muscular fellow.

550. of harre, off its hinges, lit. hinge. 'I horle at the notes, and heve

553. Todd cites from Lilly's Midas—'How, sir, will you be trimmed?
Will you have your beard like a spade or a bodkin?'—Illustr. of Gower,
p. 258.

559. forneys. 'Why, asks Mr. Earle, should Chaucer so readily fall on the simile of a furnaee? What, in the uses of the time, made it come so ready to hand? The weald of Kent was then, like our "black country" now, a great smelting district, its wood answering to our coal; and Chaucer was Knight of the Shire, or M.P. for Kent.'—Temporary NOTES.

560. golyardeys, one who gains his living by following rich men's tables, and telling tales and making sport for the guests. Tyrwhitt says, 'This jovial sect seems to have been so called from Golias, the real or assumed name of a man of wit, towards the end of the twelfth century, who wrote the Apocalypsis Goliae, and other pieces in burlesque Latin rhymes, some of which have been falsely attributed to Walter Map. In several authors of the thirteenth century, quoted by Du Cange, the goliardii are classed with the jocularspes et buffones.' But Mr. Skeat thinks that Golias is the sole invention of Walter Map, the probable author of the 'Golias' poems. See Piers Plowman, ed. Skeat, p. 101 (Clarendon Press Series); Morley's Eng. Writers, 1866, i. 586.

562. 'Besides the usual payment in money for grinding corn, millers are always allowed what is called "toll," amounting to 4 lbs. out of every sack of flour.'—Bell.

563. a thombe of gold. 'An explanation of this proverb is given on the authority of Mr. Constable, the Royal Academician, by Mr. Yarrell in his History of British Fishes, who says, when speaking of the Bullhead or Miller's Thumb, "The head of the fish is smooth, broad, and rounded, and is said to resemble exactly the form of the thumb of a miller, as produced by a peculiar and constant action of the muscles in the exercise of a particular and most important part of his occupation. It is well known that all the science and tact of a miller is directed so to regulate the machinery of his mill that the meal produced shall be of the most valuable description that the operation of grinding will permit, when performed under the most advantageous circumstances. His profit or his loss, even his fortune or his ruin, depend upon the exact adjustment of all the various parts of the machinery in operation. The miller's ear is constantly directed to the note made by the running-stone in its circular course over the bed-stone, the exact parallelism of their two surfaces, indicated by a particular sound, being a matter of the first consequence; and his hand is as constantly placed under the meal-spout, to ascertain by actual contact the character and qualities of the meal produced. The thumb, by a particular movement, spreads the sample over the fingers; the thumb is the gauge of the value of the produce, and hence have arisen the sayings of worth a miller's thumb, and an honest miller hath a golden thumb, in reference to the amount of the profit that is the reward of his skill. By this incessant action of the miller's thumb, a peculiarity in its form is produced, which is said to resemble exactly the shape of the head of the fish, constantly found in the mill-stream, and has obtained for it the name of the Miller's Thumb, which occurs in the comedy of Wit at several Weapons by Beaumont and Fletcher, act v. sc. 1; and also in Merrett's Pinax. Although the improved machinery of the present time has diminished the necessity for the miller's skill in the mechanical department, the thumb is still constantly resorted to as the best test for the quality of flour." After all, is not the old proverb satirical, inferring that all millers who have not golden thumbs are rogues—argal, as Shakspeare says, that all millers are rogues? See Notes and Queries, Fourth Series, iii. May 1, 1869, p. 407. The latter is Tyrwhitt's explanation. Cf.

'When millers toll not with a golden thumbe.'
Gascoigne's Steel Glass, I. 1080.

Ray's Proverbs give us—'An honest miller has a golden thumb;' ed. 1768, p. 136. Brand, in his Pop. Antiquities, ed. Ellis, iii. 387, quotes from an old play—'Oh the mooter-dish, the miller's thumbe!'

567. Maunciple or manciple, an officer who had the care of purchasing provisions for a college, an inn of court, &c. (Still in use.)

'And (he) bereth away my whete,
And taketh me but a taille
For ten quarters of otes.'

572. ay biforn, ever before (others).

584. al a, a whole. Cf. 'al a summer's day' (Milton, P. L. i. 449).

586. hir aller cappe, the caps of them all. Hir aller = eorum omnium. 'To settre' a man's 'cappe' is to overreach him, to cheat him, or to befool him. Cf. C. T. 3145.

587. Reve. See Mr. Thorold Rogers' capital sketch of Robert Oldman, the Cuxham bailiff, a serf of the manor (as reeves always were), in his Agriculture and Prices in England, i. 506-510.

609. astored (Elles. &c.); istored (Harl.).

612. and yet a gowne and hood (Elles.); a cote and eek an hood (Harl.).

615. Stot, probably what we should now call a cob. Mr. J. E. T. Rogers, in his Hist. of Agriculture, i. 36, supposes that a stot was a low-bred undersized stallion.

616. Scot. 'The name given to the horse of the reeve (who lived at Bawdeswell, in Norfolk) is a curious instance of Chaucer's accuracy; for to this day there is scarcely a farm in Norfolk or Suffolk, in which one of the horses is not called Scot;' note in Bell's Chaucer.

617. pers. Some MSS. read blew. See note on I. 439.

621. Tukked aboute, with his long coat tucked up round him by help of a girdle. In the pictures in the Ellesmere MS., both the reeve and the friar have girdles, and rather long coats. See Tuck in Skeat, Etym. Dict.

624. cherubinnes face. H. Stephens, Apologia for Herodotus, i. c. 30, quotes the same thought from a French epigram—'Nos grands docteurs au cherubin visage.'—T. 'His face was red as any cherubyn;' Thynne, Debate between Pride and Lowliness.
625. saucefleam or sawsfleam, having a red pimplled face. ‘Tyrwhitt has a note upon the word, which proves that saucefleam was a special kind of malady. He quotes from an old French physic-book, and from the Thousand Notable Things: “Oignement magistrel pur sausefleme et pur chescune manere de roigne. . . . A sawsfleame or red pimplled face is helped with this medicine following.” In his Glossary, however, he gives a quotation from “MS. Bodl. 2463,” which seems to settle the etymology of the word—“Ungement contra salsum flegma, scabiem, &c. See Galen in Hippoc. de Aliment. Comment. iii. p. 277: ὁ λάχνυ . . . γίνεται ἀπὸ φλέγματος ἀλμυροῦ καὶ τῆς ξανθῆς χύλης. And again: ὁ ἀλφὸς . . . ὑπὸ τοῦ φλέγματος, οὐκ ἀλυκοῦ.” See also Halliwell under “Sauseflemed.” In John Russell’s Boke of Nurture, l. 776 (Manners and Meals in Olden Time), we have “a flewische countenance” given as the sign of the phlegmatic temperament, and a note refers us to Promptorium Parvulorum, where we find flew and fleume = flegma. (In some MSS. of Chaucer we get sauceflewm and sausefleume.) The four humours of the blood, and the four consequent temperaments, are constantly referred to in various ways by early writers—by Chaucer as much as by any. In the Aynbite of Inwyt, p. 157, we are told how the Devil tempts men through the four complexions—“Jane fleummatike mid glotonye and be sleauhe.” As to imposthumes, &c. arising from disorders of the four humours, I find an apposite fragment in the Retrospective Review (New Series, ii. p. 411, August, 1854): “It is to wit atte begynnyn[a]g that all empostines withoutforth, that be hoven and swollen, eythir thei ben litill or grett. If thei be grett, thei ben sprongen of iij humers synnyngye. Wherfor empostume off blode and yer-off engendred is callyd flegmon; empostume sprungen off fleume is callyd baas, that is to say law, empostume; of rede coleryk is called hersipula. Empostume sprungen off malancoli is called sclyros.”—John Addis, M.A.; in Notes and Queries, Fourth Series, iv. 64, July 17, 1869.

632. Cf. ‘Such whelkes [on the head] haue small hoales, out of the which matter commeth... And this cuill commeth of viscous and gleymie [viscous] humour, which commeth to the skin of their head, and breedeth therein pimples and whelks.’—Batman on Bartholome, lib. 7. c. 3. In the same, lib. 7. c. 67, we read that ‘A sauce flume face is a priuye signe of leprosie.’ Cf. Shak. Hen. V. iii. 6. 108.

643. Can clepen Watte, i.e. can call Walter (Wat) by his name; just as parrots are taught to say ‘Poll.’ In Political Songs, ed. Wright, p. 328, an ignorant priest is likened to a jay in a cage, to which is added: ‘God Engelish he speketh, ac [but] he wot nevere what.’

646. Questio quid iuris. ‘This kind of question occurs frequently in Ralph de Hengham. After having stated a case, he adds, quid juris, and then proceeds to give an answer to it.’—T. It means—‘the question is, what law (is there)?’ i.e. what is the law on this point?
654-657. ‘He would teach his friend to stand in no awe of the archdeacon’s curse (excommunication), unless he supposed that his soul resided in his purse; for in his purse [not in his soul] he should be punished’ (i.e. by paying a good round sum he could release himself from the archdeacon’s curse).

662. war him of, i.e. let him beware of.

663. In daunger, in his jurisdiction, within the reach or control of his office; the true sense of M. E. daunger is ‘power to harm.’ For gyse (Elles. &c.) Harl. alone has assise.

665. and was al hir reed, and was wholly their adviser.

666, 667. gerland. The garland here spoken of was distinct from the bush. The latter was made of ivy-leaves; and every tavern had an ivy-bush hanging in front as its sign; hence the phrase, ‘Good wine needs no bush,’ &c. See Becon’s works, ‘The Acts of Christ,’ p. 524. But the garland, often used in addition to the bush, was made of three equal hoops, at right angles to each other, and decorated with ribands. It was also called a hoop. The sompnour wore only a single hoop. In Riley’s Memorials of London, p. 133, garland means a metal circlet worn on the head.

667. ale-stake, a support for a garland in front of an ale-house. For a picture of an ale-stake with a garland, see Hotten’s Book of Signboards. Chatterton, in his poem of Aella, st. 30, has the line

‘Around the ale-stake minstrels sing the song.’

On this Mr. Skeat remarks, in his edition of Chatterton, vol. ii. p. xix—

‘The very use of the prep. around shews that the line was written long after ale-stakes had ceased to exist, by a person who had never seen one. It is true that Speght wrongly explains an ale-stake by a May-pole, in which he is, as usual, carefully copied by Kersey and Bailey; but it is, in reality, nothing of the sort, nor would minstrels be able to gather around it, unless they possessed the unusual qualification of being able to walk like flies up and down the side of a house. The position of it was such that it did not stand upright, but projected horizontally from the side of a tavern at some height from the ground, as shewn in Larwood and Hotten’s Book of Signboards. Hence the enactments made that it should never extend above the roadway for more than seven feet; see Liber Albus, ed. H. T. Riley, 1861, pp. 292, 389. ... The right expression is “at this ale-stake,” Cant. Tales, 12255.’

670. Of Rouncivale. ‘I can hardly think that Chaucer meant to bring his Pardoner from Roncevaux, in Navarre, and yet I cannot find any place of that name in England. An hospital, Beate Mariae de Rouncyvalle, in Charing, London, is mentioned in the Monast. tom. ii. p. 443; and there was a Runceval-Hall in Oxford. (Stevens, vol. ii.
p. 262.) So that perhaps it was the name of some fraternity.'—Tyrwhitt.

672. Com hider, love, to me. 'This, I suppose, was the beginning, or the burden of some known song.'—Tyrwhitt.

673. bar . . . a stif burdoun, sang the bass. Cf. Fr. bourdon, the name of a deep organ-stop.

682. the newe let, the new fashion, which is described in ll. 680–683.

'Also, there is another newe gette,
A foule waste of clothe and excessyfe,
There goth no lesse in a mannes typte
Than of brode clothe a yerd, by my lyfe.'—Occleve.

685. vernicle, 'a diminutive of Veronike (Veronica), a copy in miniature of the picture of Christ, which is supposed to have been miraculously imprinted upon a handkerchief preserved in the church of St. Peter at Rome. . . It was usual for persons returning from pilgrimages to bring with them certain tokens of the several places which they had visited; and therefore the Pardoner, who is just arrived from Rome, is represented with a vernicle sawed on his cappe.'—Tyrwhitt. See Piers Plowman, ed. Skeat, B. v. 526:

'A bolle and a bagge he bare by his syde;
An hundredth of ampulles on his hatt seten,
Signes of Synay, and shelles of Galiee,
And many a cruche on his cloke and keyes of Rome,
And the vernicle bifoire, for men shulde knowe
And se bi his signes, whom he sought hadde.'

687. Bret-ful of pardoun, brim-full (top-full, full to the top) of indulgences.

692. Fro Berwik, from Berwick to Ware (in Hertfordshire), from North to South of England. See the similar phrase—'From Barwick to Dover, three hundred miles over'—in Pegge's Kenticisms (E.D.S.), p. 70.

701. Heywood in the following lines has borrowed, with some alterations, the preamble to Chaucer's Pardoner's Tale (see 'A Dialogue of Wit and Folly,' ed. Fairholt, pp. liii–lvi):

'The pardoner. God and saynte Leonarde sende ye all his grace
As many as ben assembled in this place.
Good devout people that here do assemble,
I pray God that ye may all well resemble
The ymage, after whiche you are wrought;
And that ye save that Chryst in you bought.
Devout chrysten people, ye shall all wytte
That I am comen hyther ye to vysytte,
Wherfore let us pray thus or I begynne,
Our sauyoure preserue ye all from synne!
And enable ye to receyue this blessed pardon,
Whiche is the greatest vndor the son,
Graunted by the pope in his bulles under lede,
Whiche pardon ye shall synde whan ye are dede,
That offereth outhere grotes or els pens,
To these holy relyques, whiche or I go hens
I shall here shewe, in open audyence,
Exortynge ye all to do to them reverence.

But first ye shall know well, y* I com fro Rome,
Lo here my bulles, all and some,
Our lyege lorde scale here on my patent
I bere with me, my body to warant;
That no man be so bolde, be he preest or clarke,
Me to dystrybe of Chrystes holy warke;
Nor haue no dysdayne, nor yet scorne,
Of these holy relyques whiche sauyntes haue worene.

Fyrst, here I shewe ye, of a holy Jewes shepe
A bone, I pray you take good kepe
To my wordes, and marke them well:—
Yf any of your bestes belyes do swell,
Dyppe this bone in the water that he dothe take Into his body, and the swellynge shall slake.
And yf any worme haue your beestes stonge,
Take of this water, and wasshe his tonge,
And it wyll be hole anon; and furthermore
Of pockes, and scabbes, and every sore,
He shall be quyte hole that drynketh of the well
That this bone is dipped in; it is treuth that I tell!
And yf any man that any beste oweth
Ones in the weke, or that the cocke croweth,
Fastynge wyll drynke of this well a draughte,
As that holy Jew hath vs taught,
His beestes and his store shall multepley.
And maysters all, it helpeth well;
Though a man be foule in ielous rage,
Let a man with this water make his potage,
And neuermore shall he his wyfe mystryst.

Here is a myttayn eke, as ye may se;
He that his hande wyll put in this myttayn,
He shall haue encrease of his grayn,
That he hath sowne, be it w[h]ete or otys,
So that he offer pens, or els grotes.
And another holy relyke eke here se ye may;
The blessed arme of swete Saynt Sondaye!
And who so euer is blessyd with this ryght hande,
Can not spede amysse by se nor by lande;
And if he offereth eke with good denocyon,
He shall not fayle to come to hyghe promocyon.

And another holy relyke here may ye see,
The great too of the Holy Trynyte.
And who so euer ones doth it in his mouthe take,
He shall neuer be dysseasyd with the tothe-ake!
Canker nor pockys shall there none brede!
This that I shewe ye is matter in deed!

And here is of our Lady, a relyke full good,
Her bongrace which she ware with her French hode*
Whan she wente oute, al-wayes for sonne-bornynge;
And if this bongrace they do deuoutly kys,
And offer therto, as theyre deuocyon is.

And if this bongrace they do deuoutly kys,
And offer therto, as theyre deuocyon is.

Here is another relyke, eke a precyous one,
Of all helowes [All Saints] the blessyd jaw-bone,
Which relyke, without any fayle,
Agaynst poyson chiefly dothe preuayle.
For whom so euer it toucheth, without dout,
All maner venym from hym shall issue out;
So that it shall hurt no maner wyghte;
Lo, of this relyke the great power and myght,
Which preseruyth from poyson euery man.
Lo of Saynt Myghell, eke the brayn-pan!
Which for the hed-ake is a preseruatyfe,
To every man or beste that beryth lyfe.
And further it shall stande hym in better stede,
For his hede shall neuer ake whan that he is dede.
Nor he shall fele no maner grese nor payn,
Though with a sworde one cleue it than a-tayyn!
But be as one that lay in a dede slepe,
Wherfore to these relykes now come crouche and crepe.
But loke that ye offerynge to them make Or els can ye no maner profyte take.'

* The French hood was the close coif, fashionable among ladies at this period; the bongrace was a frontlet attached to the hood, and standing up round the forehead; as may be particularly seen in the portraits of Queen Anne Bullen. See History of Costume in England, p. 243, and Glossary, p. 441 (vol. i. p. 232, vol. ii. p. 57, ed. 1885).
716. Thesstat, tharray = the estate, the array: the coalescence of the article with the noun is very common in Old English writers.

726. 'That ye ascribe it not to my ill-breeding.'

727. pleynly speke (Elles. &c.); speke al pleyu (Harl.).

734. Al speke he, although he speak. See al have I, l. 744.

741, 742. This saying of Plato is taken from Boethius, De Consolatione, lib. iii. pr. 12. 'Thou hast lerned by the sentence of Plato, that nedes the wordes moten ben cosynes to tho things of whiche thei speken;' see Boeth., ed. Morris, p. 106, ll. 16, 17. In Le Roman de la Rose, 7131, Jean de Meun says that Plato tells us speech was given us to express our wishes and thoughts, and proceeds to argue that men ought to use coarse language. Chaucer was thinking of this singular argument. We also find in Le Roman (l. 15372) the very words of the present passage:—

'Li dis doit le fait ressembler;
Car les vois as choses voisines
Doivent estre à lor faiz cosines.'

764. I saugh nat (Elles. &c.); I ne saugh (Harl.). To scan the line, read I n' saugh, dropping the e in ne.

770. 'May the blessed martyr reward you!'

772. talen = to tell tales.

785. to make it wys, to make it a matter of wisdom or deliberation; so also made it straunce = made it a matter of difficulty, C. T. 3978.

810. and our othes swore, and we our oaths swore; see next line.

817. In heigh and lowe. 'Lat. In, or de alto et basso, Fr. de haut en bas, were expressions of entire submission on one side, and sovereignty on the other.'—Tyrwhitt. It here means—'under all circumstances.'

822. day. It is the morning of the 17th of April. See Ch. 2, p. xi.

826. St. Thomas a Waterings was a place for watering horses, at a brook beside the second mile-stone on the road to St. Thomas's shrine, i.e. to Canterbury. See Nares.

838. draweth cut, draw lots, lit. draw the short straw. In the Gloss. to Allan Ramsay’s poems, ed. 1721, he explains—'cutts, lots. These cuts are usually made of straws unequally cut, which one hides between his finger and thumb, whilst another draws his fate.'—Brand, Pop. Antiq., iii. 337. The one who drew the shortest (or else the longest) straw was the one who drew the lot. Cf. 'Sors, a kut, or a lotte;’ Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 7. 'Froissart calls it tirer à longue paille, to draw the long straw,' vol. i. c. 294.—T. 'After supper, we drew cuttes for a score of apricoks, the longest cut stil to draw an apricoke;' Marston, Induction to The Malcontent.

847. as was resoun, as was reasonable or right.
THE KNIGHTES TALE.

It is only possible to give here a mere general idea of the way in which the Knightes Tale is related to the Teseide of Boccaccio. The following table gives a sketch of it, but includes very many lines wherein Chaucer is quite original. The reference to the Knightes Tale are to the lines; those to the Teseide are to the books and stanzas.

The MSS. quote a line and a half from Statius, Thebaid, xii. 510, 520, because Chaucer is referring to that passage in his introductory lines to this tale; see particularly ll. 9, 11, 12.

Lines 1-24 and 106-123 should be compared with Chaucer's Anelida and Arcite, ll. 22-46. Lines 24 and 114 are borrowed from that poem, with but slight alteration.

3. governour. It should be observed that Chaucer continually accented words in the Anglo-French manner, on the last syllable. Thus we have here governour; again in the next line, conquerour; in l. 7, chivalrye; in l. 11, contrée; in l. 18, manère, &c. &c. The most remarkable examples are when the words end in -ou (ll. 35, 77).

6. contrée is here accented on the first syllable; in l. 11, on the last. This is a good example of the unsettled state of the accents of such words in Chaucer's time, which afforded him an opportunity of licence, which he freely uses. In fact, contrée shows the English, and contrée the French accent.

7. chivalrye, knightly exploits. In l. 20, chivalrye=knight; Eng. chivalry. So also in l. 124.

8. regne of Feménye. The kingdom (Lat. regnum) of the Amazons. Feménye is from Lat. femina, a woman. Cf. Statius, Theb. xii. 578.
10. Ipolita, Shakespeare’s Hippolyta, in Mids. Night’s Dream. The name is in Statius, Theb. xii. 534, spelt Hippolyte.

27. as now, at present, at this time. Cf. the M.E. adverbs as-swithe, as-sone, immediately.

31. I wol nat letten eek noon of this route, I desire not to hinder eke (also) none of all this company. Wol = desire; cf. ‘I will have mercy,’ &c.

43. creature is here a word of three syllables. In l. 248 it has four syllables.

45. yolde, would not: ne yolde was no doubt pronounced yolde, would not; so ne hath, hath not, was pronounced nath.

50. that thus, i.e. ye that thus.

53. clothed thus (Elles.); clad thus al (Harl.).

54. alle is to be pronounced al-lè. Tyrwhitt inserts than, then, after alle, against the authority of the best MSS.

Statius (Theb. xii. 545) calls this lady Capaneia coniux; see l. 74, below. He says all the ladies were from Argos, and their husbands were kings.

55. a deedly chere, a deathly countenance.

60. we besieken, we beseech, ask for. For such double forms as beseken and besuchen, cf. mod. Eng. dike and ditch, kirk and chirk, sack and satchel, stick and stitch. In the Early Eng. period the harder forms with k were very frequently employed by Northern writers, who preferred them to the palatalised Southern forms (perhaps influenced by Anglo-French) with ch. Cf. M.E. brig and rigg with bridge and ridge.

68. This line means ‘that ensureth no estate to be (always) good.’

70. Clemence, Clemency, Pity. Suggested by ‘il tempio ... di Cle- menza,’ Tes. ii. 17; which again is from ‘mitis posuit Clementia sedem,’ Theb. xii. 482.

74. Capaneus, one of the seven heroes who besieged Thebes: struck dead by lightning as he was scaling the walls of the city, because he had defied Zeus; Theb. x. 927. See note to l. 54, above.

83. for despjt, out of vexation; mod. E. ‘for spite.’

84. To do the dede bodyes vileinye, to treat the dead bodies shamefully.

90. withouten more restpyt, without longer delay.

91. they fillen grus, they fell flat with the face to the ground. In M.E. we find the phrase to fall grovelinges, or to fall groveling.

96. Him thoughte, it seemed to him; cf. methinks, it seemed to me. In M.E. the verbs like, list, seem, rue (pity), are used impersonally, and take the dative case of the pronoun. Cf. the modern expression ‘if you please’ = if it be pleasing to you.

97. mat, dejected. ‘Ententlyfly, not feyn, wery ne mate.’—Hardyng, p. 129.
102. ferforthly, i.e. far-forth-like, to such an extent, as far as.
107. abood, delay, awaiting, abiding.
108. His baner he desplayeth, i.e. he summons his troops to assemble for military service.
110. No neer, no nearer.
112. lay, lodged for the night.
117. statue, the image, as depicted on the banner.
119. feeides, field, is an heraldic term for the ground upon which the various charges, as they are called, are emblazoned. Some of this description was suggested by the Thebais, lib. xii. 665, &c.; but the resemblance is very slight.
120. penoun, pennon. y-bete, beaten; the gold being hammered out into a thin foil in the shape of the Minotaur; see Marco Polo, ed. Yule, i. 344. But, in the Thebais, the Minotaur is upon Theseus' shield.
130. In pleyn bataille, in open or fair fight.
135. obséquies (Elles., &c.) ; exéquies (Harl.) ; accented on the second syllable.
146. as him lest, as it pleased him.
147. tas, heap, collection. Some MSS. read cas (caas), which might = downfall, ruin, Lat. casus; but, as c and t are constantly confused, this reading is really due to a mere blunder. Gower speaks of gathering a tasse of sticks; Conf. Amant. bk. v. ed. Pauli, ii. 293. Palsgrave has—
'On a heape, en vug tas,' p. 840. Hexham's Dutch Dict. (1658) has—' een Tas, a Shock, a Pile, or a Heape.'
148. harneys. 'And arma be not taken onely for the instruments of al maner of crafts, but also for harneys and weapon; also standards and banners, and sometimes battels.'—Bossewell's Armorie, p. r, ed. 1597.
Cf. l. 755.
152. Thurch-girt, pierced through. This line occurs again in Troilus, iv. 599 [or 627]: 'Thorwgh-gyrt with many wyde and blody wounde.'
153. liggyng by and by, lying separately. In later English, by and by signifies presently, immediately, as 'the end is not by and by.'
154. in oon armes, in one (kind of) arms or armour, shewing that they belonged to the same house. Chaucer adapts ancient history to medieval times.
157. Nat fully quike, not wholly alive.
158. by her cote-armures, by their coat-armour, by the devices on the armour covering the breast. Cf. l. 154.
by hir gere, by their gear, i.e. equipments.
160. they. Tyrwhitt reads tho, those; but the seven best MSS. have they.
165. Tathenes, to Athens; Harl. MS. Cf. tallegge, l. 2142 (footnote).
166. he nolde no raunsoun, he would accept of no ransom.
171. Terme of his lyf, the remainder of his life. Cf. 'The end and term of natural philosophy.'—Bacon's Advancement of Learning, Bk. ii. p. 129, ed. Aldis Wright.

177. Cf. Leg. of Good Women, 2422, 2423.

180. strof hir hewe, strove her hue, i.e. her complexion contested the superiority with the rose's colour.

181. I noot, I know not; noot = ne wot.

189. May. 'Against Maie, every parishe, towne, and village, assembled themselves together, bothe men, women, and children, olde and yonge, even all indifferently, and either going all together or devidying themselves into companies, they goe, some to the woods and groves, some to the hills and mountaines, some to one place, some to another, when they spend all the night in pastimes; in the morning they return, bringing with them birche, bowes and branches of trees, to deck their assemblies withalle.'—Stubbs, Anatomy of Abuses, ed. 1585, leaf 94 (ed. Furnivall, p. 149). Cf. Midsummer Night's Dream, i. i. 167:—

'To do observance to a morn of May.'

See also 1. 642, and the note.

191. Hir yelow heer was bryoded, her yellow hair was braided. Yellow hair was esteemed a beauty; see Seven Sages, 477, ed. Weber; King Alisaunder, 207. Boccaccio has here—'Co biondi crini avvolti alla sua testa;' Tcs. iii. io.

193. the sonne upriste, the sun's uprising; the -e in sonne represents the old genitive inflexion. Upriste is here the dat. of the sb. uprist. It occurs also in Gower, Conf. Amantis, bk. i. ed. Pauli, i. 116.

194. as hir liste, as it pleased her.

195. party, partly; Fr. en partie.

196. sotil gerland, a subtle garland; subtle has here the exact force of the Lat. subtilis, finely woven.

197. Cf. 'Con angelica voce;' Tes. iii. 10.

202. even-Ioynant, closely joining, or adjoining.

203. Ther as this Emelye hadde hir pleyinge, i.e. where she was amusing herself.

205. In the Teseide (iii. 11) it is Arcite who first sees Emily.

216. by aventure or cas, by adventure or hap.

218. sparre, a square wooden bolt; the bars, which were of iron, were as thick as they must have been if wooden. See 1. 132.

220. blëynée, the past tense of blenche, or blunke (to blench), to start, draw back suddenly. Cf. dreynte, pt. t. of drenchen. 'Tutto stordito, Gridö, Omè!' Tes. iii. 17.

229. Som wikke aspect. 'Cf. "wykked planetes, as Saturne or Mars," Astrolabe, ii. 4. 21; notes in Wright's edition, ll. 2453, 2457; and Piers the Plowman, B. vi. 327. Add to these the description of Saturn, "Significat in quartanis, lepra, scabie, in mania, carcere, submersione, &c.
NOTES.

Est infortuna."—Johannis Hispalensis, Isagoge in Astrologiam, cap. xv. See Knightes Tale, ii. 470, 1576, 1611.'—Skeat's Astrolabe, p. xlviii.

231. al-though, &c., although we had sworn to the contrary. Cf. 'And can nought flee, if I had it sworn;' Lydgate, Dance of Machabre, The Sergeant. Also—'he may himselfe not sustene Upon his feet, though he had it sworne;' Lydgate, Siege of Thebes (The Sphinx), pt. i.

233. the short and pleyn, the brief and manifest statement of the case.

234. wher, a very common form for whether. This line is also in Troilus, i. 425, with slight alteration.

247. Yow (used reflexively), yourself.

248. wrecche, wretched, is a word of two syllables, like wikke, wicked, where the d is a later and unnecessary addition.

250. shapen, shaped, determined. 'Shapes our ends.'—Shakespeare, Hamlet, v. 2. 10.

262. 'And except I have her pity and her favour.'

263. atte lest weye, at the least. Cf. leastwise=at the leastwise; 'at leastwise;' Bacon's Advancement of Learning, ed. Wright, p. 147, l. 23. See English Bible (Preface of 'The Translators to the Reader').

264. 'I am not but (no better than) dead, there is no more to say.' Chaucer uses ne—but much in the same way as the Fr. ne—que. Cf. North English 'I'm nobbut clemmed'= I am almost dead of hunger.

266. by my fey, by my faith, in good faith.

269. me list ful evele pleye, it pleaseth me very badly to play.

270. This debate is an imitation of the longer debate (in the Teseide), where Palamon and Arcite meet in the grove; cf. l. 722 below.

271. It were not, it would not be.

275. 'That never, even though it cost us a miserable death, a death by torture.' So in Troilus, i. 674: 'That certein, for to dyen in the peyne.' Also in the E. version of The Romaunt of the Rose, 3326.

276. 'Till that death shall part us two.' Cf. the ingenious alteration in the Marriage Service, where the phrase 'till death us depart' was altered into 'do part' in 1661.

278. cas, case. It properly means event, hap. See l. 216.

my leve brother, my dear brother.

283. out of doute, without doubt, doubtless.

289. to my counsel, to my adviser. See l. 303.

293. I dar vel seyn, I dare maintain.

295. Thou shalt be. Chaucer occasionally uses shall in the sense of ove, so that the true sense of I shall is I owe (Lat. debeo); it expresses a strong obligation. So here it is not so much the sign of a future tense as a separate verb, and the sense is 'Thou art sure to be false sooner than I am.'

297. par amour, with love, in the way of love. To love par amour is an old phrase for to love excessively.
THE KNIGHTES TALE.

300. affeccion of holynesse, a sacred affection, or aspiration after.

304. I pose, I put the case, I will suppose.

305. 'Knowest thou not well the old writer's saying?' The olde clerk is Boethius, from whose book, De Consolatione Philosophiae, Chaucer has borrowed largely in many places. The passage alluded to is in lib. iii. met. 12:—

'Quis legem det amantibus?
Major lex amor est sibi.'

Chaucer's translation (ed. Morris, p. 108) has—'But what is he that may yene a lawe to louveres. Loue is a gretter lawe . . . than any lawe that men may yeuen.'

309. and swich decree, and (all) such ordinances.

310. in ech degree, in every rank of life.

314. And eek it is, &c., 'and moreover it is not likely that ever in all thy life thou wilt stand in her favour.'

319. This fable is not in any of the usual collections.

328. everich of us, each of us, every one of us.

331. to theeffect, to the result, or end.

342. in helle. An allusion to Theseus accompanying Pirithous in his expedition to carry off Proserpina, daughter of Aidoneus, king of the Molossians, when both were taken prisoner, and Perithous torn in pieces by the dog Cerberus. At least, such is the story in Plutarch; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 289. Chaucer found the mention of Pirithous' visit to Athens in Boccaccio's Teseide, iii. 47–51. The rest he found in Le Roman de la Rose, 8186—

'Si cum vesquist, ce dist l'istoire,
Pyrithous apres sa mort,
Que Theseus tant ama mort, . . .
Que vis en enfer l'ala querre.'

354. Most MSS. read or stonde. The Harl. MS. has o stound, one moment, any short interval of time.

'The storme sesed within a stownde.'

Ywaine and Gawin, l. 384.

360. his nekke lyth to wedde, his neck is in jeopardy.

364. To sleen himself he waypointh prively, he watches for an opportunity to slay himself unperceived.

365. This line, slightly altered, occurs also in the Legend of Good Women, 658.

367. Now is me shape, now am I destined; literally, now is it shapen (or appointed) for me.

389. It was supposed that all things were made of the four elements mentioned in l. 388. 'Does not our life consist of the four elements?'—Shakespeare, Twelfth Night, ii. 3. 10.

399. 'And another man would fain (get) out of his prison.'
401. *matere, in the matter of thinking to excel God's providence.
402. 'We never know what thing it is that we pray for here below.'
See Romans viii. 26.

403. *dronke is as a mous. The phrase seems to have given way to 'drunk as a rat.' 'Thus satte they swilling and carousyng, one to another, till they were both as dronke as rattes.'—Stubbes, Anatomie of Abuses; ed Furnivall, p. 113.

'I am a Flemyng, what for all that,
Although I wyll be *dronken otherwhyles as a rat.'
Andrew Boorde, ed. Furnivall, p. 147.

Cf. 'When that he is *dronke as a dreynyt mous'; Ritson, Ancient Songs,
i. 70. 'And I will pledge Tom Tosspot, till I be drunk as a mouse-a;'
Old Plays, ed. Hazlitt, iii. 339.

404. This is from Boethius, De Consolatione, lib. iii. pr. 2: 'But I retourne aeyyne to the studies of men, of which men the corage alwey rehearsith and seeketh the soveryne good of alle, be it so that it be with a derke memorie; but he not by whiche path, ryght as a dronke man not nat by whiche pathe he may retoure home to hys house.'—Chaucer's Translation of Boethius; ed. Morris, pp. 66, 67.

the gloss—'Lubricum, slidere;' Reliquiae Antiquae, i. 7.

421. *pure fettres, the very fetters. 'So in the Duchesse, l. 583, the pure deth. The Greeks used καθαρός in the same sense.'—Tyrwhitt.

425. *at thy large, at large.

444. 'White like box-wood, or ashen-gray;' cf. l. 506. Cf. 'And pale as box she wex;' Legend of Good Women, l. 866. Also 'asshen pale and dede;' Troil. ii. 539.

459. to letten of his wille, to refrain from his will (or lusts).

475. Cf. the phrase ' paurosa gelosia;' Tes. v. 2.

486. upon his heed, on pain of losing his head. Froissart has sur sa teste, sur la teste, and sur peine de la teste.—T.

489. *this questioun. 'An implied allusion to the medieval courts of love, in which questions of this kind were seriously discussed.'—Wright.

508. *making his mone, making his complaint or moan.

514-517. 'And in his manner, for all the world, he conducted himself not merely like one suffering from the lover's disease of Eros, but rather (his disease was) like mania engendered of melancholy humour.'
This is one of the numerous allusions to the four humours, viz. the choleric, phlegmatic, sanguine, and melancholic. An excess of the latter was supposed to produce 'melancholy madness.'

518. *in his celle fantastyk. Tyrwhitt reads Beforne his hed in his celle fantastike. Elles. has Bifor[n his owene celle fantastik. 'The division of the brain into cells, according to the different sensitive faculties, is very ancient, and is found depicted in medieval manuscripts. The fantastic cell (fantasia) was in front of the head.'—Wright. Hence Biforen means 'in the front part of his head.'

'Madnesse is infection of the formost cel of the head, with priuation of imagination, lyke as melancholye is the infection of the middle cell of the head, with priuation of reason, as Constant saith in libro de Melancolia. Melancolia (saith he) is an infection that hath maistry of the soule, the which commeth of dread and of sorrow. And these passions be diuerse after the diversity of the hurt of their workings; for by madnesse that is called Mania, principally imagination is hurted; and in the other reson is hurted.'—Batman upon Bartholome, lib. vii. c. 6. Vincent of Beauvais, bk. xxviii. c. 41, cites a similar statement from the Liber de Anatomia.

532. Argus, Argus of the hundred eyes, whom Mercury charmed to sleep before slaying him. Ovid, Met. i. 714.

543. Cf. 'Her face... Was al ychaunged in another kind;' Troil.iv.864.

547. bar him lowe, conducted himself as one of low estate.

551. Cf. 'in maniera di pover valletto;' Tes. iv. 22.

570. In the Teseide, iv. 3, he takes the name of Penteo. Philostrato is the name of another work by Boccaccio, answering to Chaucer's Troilus.

586. slyly, prudently, wisely. The M.E. sleigh, sly = wise, knowing; and sleight = wisdom, knowledge. (For change of meaning compare cunning, originally knowledge; craft, originally power; art, &c.)

'Ne swa slegh payntur never nan was,
Thogh his sleght mught alle other pas,
That couthe ymagyn of pair [devils'] gryslynes.'

Hampole's Pricke of Consc., ll. 2308, 2309.

605. 'The third night is followed by the fourth day; so Palamou and Arcite meet on the 4th of May (l. 715), which was a Friday (l. 676); the first hour of which was dedicated to Venus (l. 678) and to lovers' vows (l. 643).'-Skeat. The 4th of May was a Friday in 1386.

613. clarre. 'The French term claré seems simply to have denoted a clear transparent wine, but in its most usual sense a compound drink of wine with honey and spices, so delicious as to be comparable to the nectar of the gods. In Sloan MS. l. 2584, f. 173, the following directions are found for making claré:—"Take a galoun of honi, and skome (skim) it wel, and loke whanne it is isoden (boiled) that ther be a galoun; thanne take viii galouns of red wyn, than take a pounde of pouder canel (cinnamon), and a half a pounde of pouder gynger, and a quarter of a pounde of pouder pepper, and medle (mix) alle these thynges togeder and (with) the wyn; and do hym in a clene barelle, and stoppe it fast, and rolle it wel ofte sithes, as men don verious, iii dayes."'—Way; note to Prompt. Parv., p. 79.
619. nedes-cost, for needes coste, by the force of necessity. It seems to be equivalent to M.E. needes-wyse, of necessity. Alre-coste (Icelandic alís-kostar, in all respects) signifies ‘in every wise.’ It occurs in Old English Homilies (ed. Morris), part i. p. 21: ‘We ne mæsen alre-coste halden Crist(es) bibode,’ we are not able in every wise to keep Christ’s behests. The right reading in Leg. Good Women, 2694, is:—

‘And nedes cost this thing must have an ende.’

636. A beautiful line; but copied from Dante, Purg. i. 20—‘Faceva tutto rider l’oriente.’

642. See note to l. 189, where the parallel line from Shakespeare is quoted. See the interesting article on May-day Customs in Brand’s Popular Antiquities (where the quotation from Stubbes will be found); also Chambers, Book of Days, i. 577, where numerous passages relating to May are cited from old poems. An early passage relative to the 1st of May occurs in the Orologium Sapientiae, printed in Anglia, x. 387:—

‘And thanne is the custome of dyuerse contrees that yonge folke gone on the nyghte or erely on the morow to Medowes and woddes, and there they kutten downe bowes that haue fayre grene leves, and arayen hem with flowres; and after they settan hem byfore the dores where they trowe to haue amykes [friends?] in her lovers, in token of frendship and trewve loue.’

650. Were it= if it were only.

651. So in Troilus, ii. 920:

‘Ful lowde song aycein the moonc shene.’

664. ‘Veld hauedé hege, and wude hauedé heare,’ i.e. ‘Field hath eyes, and wood hath ears.’

‘Campus habet lumen, et habet nemus auris acumen.’

666. at unset stevene, at a meeting not previously fixed upon, an unexpected meeting or appointment.

‘Wee may chance to meet with Robin Hood

‘And ther they settan steven for to mete;’ C.T. 4381.

673. here queynte geres, their strange behaviours.

674. Now in the top (i.e. elevated, in high spirits), now down in the briars (i.e. depressed, in low spirits).

‘Allas! where is this worldes stabilnesse?

Here up, here downe; here honour, her repreef;

Now hale, now sike; now bounté, now myscheef.’

so many buckets in a well; as one riseth another falleth, one's empty, another's full.'—Burton's Anat. of Mel. p. 33.

678. gery, changeable; so also gerful in l. 680. Observe also the sb. gere, a changeable manner, in ll. 514, 673, and Book of the Duchesse, 1257. This very scarce word deserves illustration. Mätzner's Dictionary gives us some examples.

'By revolucion and turning of the yere
A gery March his stondis doth disclose,
Nowe reyne, nowe storme, nowe Phebus bright and clere.'

Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 25.

'Her gery Iaces,' their changeful ribands; Richard Redeless, iii. 130.

'Now gerysshe, glad and anoon aftir wrothe.'

Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 245.

'Gerysshe, wylde or lyght-headed;' Palsgrave's Diet., p. 313. In Skelton's poem of Ware the Hauke (ed. Dyce, i. 157) we find:

'His seconde hawke wexid gery,
And was with flying wery.'

Dyce, in his note upon the word, quotes two passages from Lydgate's Fall of Princes, B. iii. c. 10. leaf 77, and B. vi. c. 1. leaf 134.

'Howe gery fortune, furyous and wode.'

'The gery Romayns, stormy and unstable.'

681. A writer in Notes and Queries quotes the following Devonshire proverb: 'Fridays in the week are never aleek,' i.e. Fridays are unlike other days.

'Vendredy de la semaine est
Le plus beau ou le plus laid;'

Recueil des Contes, par A. Jubinal, p. 375.

708. Compare Legend of Goode Women, 2626:—

'Sens first that day that schapen was my sherte,
Or by the fatal suster had my dome.'

735. I drede not, I have no fear. I doubt not.

735, 736. outher . . . or = either . . . or.

764. to borwe. This expression has the same force as to wedde, in pledge. See l. 360.

768, 1249. hir thankes, willingly, with their good-will. Cf. M. E. myn unthonkes = ingratis. 'He faught with them in batayle their unthankes.'

—Hardyng's Chronicle, p. 112.
818. her daweth him no day, no day dawns upon him.
840. Similarly, Adrastus stopped the fight between Tydeus and Polynices; Statius, Theb. 1.
848. Ho, an exclamation made by heralds, to stop the fight. It was also used to enjoin silence. See II. 1675, 1798.
849. Up peine is the old phrase; as in 'up peyne of imprisonment of 40 days;* Riley's Memorials of London, p. 580.
878. it am I. This is the regular construction in early English. In modern English the pronoun it is regarded as the direct nominative, and I as forming part of the predicate.
881. 'Therefore I ask my death and my doom.'
889. Mars the rede. Boccaccio uses the same epithet in the opening of his Teseide, i. 3: 'O Marte rubicondo.' Rede refers to the colour of the planet.
903. This line occurs again three times; Squire's Tale, 479; Cant. Tales, 9860; Legend of Good Women, 503.
922. can no divisoun, knows no distinction.
923. after oon = after one mode, according to the same rule.
925. cyen lighte, cheerful looks.
941. 'Amare et Sapere vix Deo conceditur.'—Publius Syrus, Sent. 15. Cf. Adv. of Learning, ii. proem. § 15—'It is not granted to man to love and to be wise;' ed. Wright, p. 84. So also in Bacon's 10th Essay.
949. jolitee, joyfulness—said of course ironically.
950. Can . . . thank, acknowledges an obligation, owes thanks.
957, 960. Cf. the Teseide, v. 92.
979. Looth or leef, displeasing or pleasing.
980. ypaden in an ivy leef is an expression like 'blow the buck's-horn,' to console oneself with any useless or frivolous employment; it occurs again in Troilus, v. 1434. Cf. the expression 'to go and whistle.' Cf. 'farwel the gardiner; he may pipe with an yue-leaf; his fruite is failed; Test. of Love, bk. iii ; ed. 1561, fol. 316. Boys still blow against a leaf, and produce a squeak. Lydgate uses similar expressions:—

'But let his brother blowe in an horn,
Where that him list, or pipe in a reede.'

Destruction of Thebes, part ii.

992. fer ne neer, farther nor nearer, neither more nor less. 'After some little trouble, I have arrived at the conclusion that Chaucer has given us sufficient data for ascertaining both the days of the month and of the week of many of the principal events of the "Knightes Tale." The following scheme will explain many things hitherto unnoticed.

'On Friday, May 4, before 1 A.M., Palamon breaks out of prison. For (l. 605) it was during the "third night of May, but (l. 609) a little after midnight." That it was Friday is evident also, from observing that Palamon hides himself at day's approach, whilst Arcite rises "for to doon his observance to May, remem'ring on the poynt of his desire.”
To do this best, he would go into the fields at sunrise (l. 633), during the hour dedicated to Venus, i.e. during the hour after sunrise on a Friday. If however this seem for a moment doubtful, all doubt is removed by the following lines:—

“Right as the Friday, sothly for to telle,
Now it shyneth, now it reyneth faste,
Right so gan gery Venus overcaste
The hertes of hir folke; right as hir day
Is gerful, right so chaungeth she array.
Selde is the Friday al the wyke ulyke.”

“All this is very little to the point unless we suppose Friday to be the day. Or, if the reader have still any doubt about this, let him observe the curious accumulation of evidence which is to follow.

Palamon and Arcite meet, and a duel is arranged for an early hour on the day following. That is, they meet on Saturday, May 5. But, as Saturday is presid over by the inauspicious planet Saturn, it is no wonder that they are both unfortunate enough to have their duel interrupted by Theseus, and to find themselves threatened with death. Still, at the intercession of the queen and Emily, a day of assembly for a tournament is fixed for “this day fyfty wekes” (l. 992). Now we must understand “fyfty wekes” to be a poetical expression for a year. This is not mere supposition, however, but a certainty; because the appointed day was in the month of May, whereas fifty weeks and no more would land us in April. Then “this day fyfty wekes” means “this day year,” viz. on May 5. [In fact, Boccaccio has ‘un anno intero;’ Tes. v. 98.]

“Now, in the year following (supposed not a leap-year), the 5th of May would be Sunday. But this we are expressly told in l. 1330. It must be noted, however, that this is not the day of the tournament 1, but of the muster for it, as may be gleaned from l. 992-995 and 1238. The tenth hour “inequal” of Sunday night, or the second hour before sunrise of Monday, is dedicated to Venus, as explained by Tyrwhitt (l. 1359); and therefore Palamon then goes to the temple of Venus. The third hour after this, the first after sunrise on Monday, is dedicated to Luna or Diana, and during this Emily goes to Diana’s temple. The third hour after this again, the fourth after sunrise, is dedicated to Mars, and therefore Arcite then goes to the temple of Mars. But the rest of the day is spent merely in jousting and preparations—

“All the Monday jousten they and danunce.” (l. 1628.)
The tournament therefore takes place on Tuesday, May 7, on the day

1 ‘It has been objected, that this makes the tournament to take place, not on the anniversary of the duel, but two days later. I cannot help it.
It is Chaucer’s doing, not mine. Let the reader judge. See l. 1237.’
of the week presided over by Mars, as was very fitting; and this perhaps helps to explain Saturn's exclamation in l. 1811, "Mars hath his wille."

—Walter W. Skeat, in Notes and Queries, Fourth Series, ii. 2, 3; Sept. 12, 1868.

To this was added the observation, that May 5 was on a Saturday in 1386, and on a Sunday in 1387. But Ten Brink (Studien, p. 189) thinks it is of no value.

1008. 'That one of you shall be either slain or taken prisoner;' i.e. one of you must be fairly conquered.

1031. The various parts of this round theatre are subsequently described. On the North was the turret of Diana, with an oratory; on the East the gate of Venus, with altar and oratory above; on the West the gate of Mars, similarly provided.

1032. Ful of degrees, full of steps (placed one above another, as in an amphitheatre). 'But now they have gone a nearer way to the wood, for with wooden galleries in the church that they have, and stairy degrees of seats in them, they make as much room to sit and hear, as a new west end would have done.'—Nash's Red Herring, p. 21. See Shakespeare, Julius Cæsar, ii. 126, and also 2 Kings xx. 9. Cf. 'While she stey up from gre to gre.'—Lives of Saints, Roxb. Club, p. 59. Lines 1029-1036 are more or less imitated from the Teseide, vii. 108-110.

1061. on the wal, viz. on the walls within the oratory. The description is loosely imitated from Boccaccio's Teseide, vii. 55-59. It is remarkable that there is a much closer imitation of the same passage in Chaucer's Parl. of Foules, ll. 183-294. Thus at l. 246 of that poem we find:

'Within the temple, of syghes hote as fyr,
I herde a swoff, that gan aboute renne
Which syghes were engendred with desyr
That maden every auter for to brenne
Of newe flaume; and wel aspyed I themne
That al the cause of sorwes that they drye
Com of the bitter goddesse Ielsey.'

There is yet another description of the temple of Venus in the House of Fame, 119-139, where we have the very line 'Naked fleting in a see' (cf. l. 1098 below), and a mention of the 'rose garlond' (cf. l. 1103), and of 'Hir dowves and dan Cupido' (cf. ll. 1104-5).

1071. golde, a gold or turnsol. 'Goolde, herbe. Solsequium, quia sequitur solem, elitropium, calendula;' Prompt. Parv. The corn-mari-gold in the North is called goulans, guilde, or goles, and in the South, golds (Way). Gower says that Leucothea was changed

'Into a floure was named golde,
Which stant governed of the sonne.'

1078. \textit{Citheroun} = Cithaeron, sacred to Venus.

1082. In the Romaunt of the Rose, \textit{Idleness} is the \textit{porter} of the garden in which the rose (Beauty) is kept. In the Parl. of Foules, 261, the porter's name is \textit{Richesse}. Cf. ll. 2, 3 of the Second Nonnes Tale.

1113. \textit{estres}, the inner parts of a building; as also in C. T. 4293, and Leg. of Good Women, 1711.

'For thou knowest better then I
Al the \textit{estris} of this house.'

Pardoner and Tapster, 556; pr. with Tale of Beryn (below).

'His sportis [portes?] and his \textit{estris};' Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, 837. Cf. 'Qu'il set bien de l'hostel les \textit{estres};' Rom. de la Rose, 12720.

By mistaking the long s (f) for f, this word has been misprinted as \textit{eftures} in the following. 'Pleaseth it you to see the \textit{eftures} of this castle?'—Sir Thomas Malory, \textit{Mort Arthure}, b. xix. c. 7.

1121. \textit{a rumbel in a swough}, a rumbling in a gust of wind.

1124. Mars \textit{armypotente}.

'O thou rede Marz armypotente,
That in the trende baye hase made thy throne;
That God arte of bataile and regent,
And rulst all that alone;
To whom I profre precious present,
To the makande my moone
With herte, body and alle myn entente,

In worshippe of thy reverence
On thyn owen Tewesdaye.'

Sowdone of Babylouyne, ll. 939–953.

The word \textit{armipotent} is borrowed from Boccaccio's \textit{armipotente}, in the \textit{Teseide}, vii. 32. Other similar borrowings occur hereabouts, too numerous for mention.

Let the reader take particular notice that the temple here described (ll. 1124–1136) is merely a \textit{painted} temple, depicted on one of the walls \textit{inside} the oratory of Mars. The other walls had paintings similar to those inside the temple of which the outside is thus depicted. Chaucer describes the painted temple as if it were real, which is somewhat confusing. Inconsistent additions were made in revision.

1126. \textit{Streit}, narrow; 'la stretta entrata;' \textit{Tes.} vii. 32.

1129. 'I suppose the northern light is the aurora borealis, but this phenomenon is so rarely mentioned by mediæval writers, that it may be questioned whether Chaucer meant anything more than the faint and cold illumination received by reflexion through the door of an apartment fronting the north.' (Marsh.) The fact is, however, that Chaucer here copies Statius, Theb. vii. 40–58; see the translation in the note to l. 1159 below. The 'northern light' seems to be an incorrect rendering of 'adversum Phœbi iubar,' l. 45.

1132. 'Elle porte eran d'eterno diamante;' Teseide, vii. 32. Such is the reading given by Warton. However, the true source is the phrase in Statius—'adamante perenni...fores;' Theb. vii. 68.

1139–40. Cf. the Teseide, vii. 33:—

'Videvi l'Ire rosse, come fuoco,
E le Paure pallide in quel loco.'

But Chaucer follows Statius still more closely. Ll. 1137–1154 answer to Theb. vii. 48–53.

—'cæcumque Nefas, Iræque rubentes,
Exsanguesque Metus, occultisque ensibus astant
Insidiae, geminumque tenens Discordia ferrum.
Innumeris strepit aula minis; tristissima Virtus
Stat medio, lœtusque Furor, vultuque cruento
Mars armata sedet.'

1143. See Chaucer's Legend of Hypermestre.

1146. chirkyng is properly the cry of birds. The Lansd. MS. has schrikeinge (shrieking). See House of Fame, iii. 853 (or 1943). In Batman upon Bartholome, lib. viii. c. 29, the music of the spheres is attributed to the 'cherkyng' of the moaning of the circles, and of the roundnes of heauen.'

1149. This line contains an allusion to the death of Sisera, Judges iv. But Dr. Koch has pointed out (Essays on Chaucer, Chaucer Soc. iv. 371) that we have here some proof that Chaucer may have altered his first draft of the poem without taking sufficient heed to what he was about. The original line may have stood—

'The sleyr of her husband saw I there'— or something of that kind; for the reason that no suicide has ever yet been known to drive a nail into his own head. That a wife might do so to her husband is Chaucer's own statement; for, in the Cant. Tales, 6347–52, we find—

'Of later date of wives hath he red,
That somme han slain hir husbands in hir bed...
And somme han driven nailes in hir brain,
Whyl that they slepe, and thus they han hem slain.'

Of course it may be said that l. 1148 is entirely independent of l. 1149; but the suggestion is worth notice.
THE KNIGHTES TALE. 185

1159. hoppesteres. Speght explains this word by pilots (gubernaculum tenentes); Tyrwhitt, female dancers (Ital. ballatrice). Others explain it hoppesteres = opposteres = opposing, hostile, so that schippes hoppesteres = bellatrices carinae (Statius). As, however, it is impossible to suppose that even opposteres without the h can ever have been formed from the verb to oppose, the most likely solution is that Chancer mistook the word bellatrices in Statius (vii. 57) or the corresponding Ital. word bellatrici in the Teseide, vii. 37, for ballatrices or ballatrici, which might be supposed to mean 'female dancers'; an expression which would exactly correspond to an M. E. form hoppesteres, from the A. S. hoppestre, a female dancer. Herodias' daughter is mentioned (in the dative case) as pære lyðran hoppystran (better spelt hoppestran) in Ælfric's A. S. Homilies, ed. Thorpe, i. 484. Hence schippes hoppesteres simply means 'dancing ships.' Shakespeare likens the English fleet to 'A city on the inconstant billows dancing';' Hen. V. iii. prol. 15.

The following extract from Lewis' translation of Statius' Thebaid, bk. vii. is of some interest.

'Beneath the fronting height of Æmus stood
The fane of Mars, encompass'd by a wood.
The mansion, rear'd by more than mortal hands,
On columns fram'd of polish'd iron stands;
The well-compacted walls are plated o'er
With the same metal; just without the door
A thousand Furies frown. The dreadful gleam,
That issues from the sides, reflects the beam
Of adverse Phoebus, and with cheerless light
Saddens the day, and starry host of night.
Well his attendants suit the dreary place;
First frantic Passion, Wrath with redd'ning face,
And Mischief blind from forth the threshold start;
Within lurks pallid Fear with quiv'ring heart,
Discord, a two-edged falchion in her hand,
And Treach'ry, striving to conceal the brand.'

1162. for all, notwithstanding. Cf. Piers the Plowman, B. xix. 274.
1163. infortune of Marte. 'Tyrwhitt thinks that Chancer might intend to be satirical in these lines; but the introduction of such apparently undignified incidents arose from the confusion already mentioned of the god of war with the planet to which his name was given, and the influence of which was supposed to produce all the disasters here mentioned. The following extract from the Compost of Ptolemeus gives some of the supposed effects of Mars:—"Under Mars is borne theves and robbers that kepe hyc wayes, and do hurte to true men, and nyght-walkers, and quarell-pykers, bosters, mockers, and skoffers, and these men of Mars causeth warre and murther, and batayle; they wyll be gladly smythes or workers of yron, lyght-fyngred, and lyers, gret swerers of othes in vengeable wyse, and a great surmyler and crafty. He is red and angry, with blacke heer, and lytell iycen; he shall be a great walker, and a maker of swordes and knyves, and a sheder of mannes blode, and a fornyctour, and a speker of rybawdry . . . and good to be a barbour and a blode-letter, and to drawe tethe, and is peryllous of his handes." The following extract is from an old astrological book of the sixteenth century:—"Mars denoteth men with red faces and the skinne redde, the face round, the eyes yellow, horrible to behold, furious men, cruell, desperate, provide, sedicious, soldiers, captaines, smythes, colliers, bakers, alcumistes, armourers, furnishers, butchers, chirurgions, barbers, sargiants, and hangmen, according as they shall be well or evill disposed."—Wright. Chaucer has 'cruel Mars' in The Man of Lawes Tale, 301; and cf. note to l. 229.

1164. From Statius, Theb. vii. 58:—

'Et uacui currus, protritaque curribus ora.'

1171. For the story of Damocles see Cicero, Tuscul. 5. 61; cf. Horace, Od. iii. 1. 17.

1179, sterres (Harl.) Elles &c. have certres (sertres); but this strange reading can hardly be other than a mistake for sterres, which is proved to be the right word by the parallel passage in The Man of Lawes Tale, 194-6.

1187. 'The names of two figures in geomancy, representing two constellations in heaven. Puella signifieth Mars retrograde, and Rubeus Mars direct.' (Speght.)

1201, 1203. 'Cf. Ovid's Fasti, ii. 153-192; especially 189, 190,

Arctophylax formam terga sequentis habet."

The nymph Callisto was changed into Arctos or the Great Bear. This was sometimes confused with the other Arctos or Lesser Bear, in which was situate the lodestar or Polestar. Chaucer has followed this error. Callisto's son, Arcas, was changed into Arctophylax or Boötes: here again Chaucer says a sterre, when he means a whole constellation; as, perhaps, he does in other passages.'—Skeat's Astrolabe, pp. xlviii, xl ix.

1204, 1206. Dane = Daphne, a girl beloved by Apollo, and changed into a laurel. See Ovid's Metamorph. i. 450; Gower, Conf. Amantis, ed. Pauli, i. 336.

1216. nat drawn to memorie = not draw to memory, not call to mind.
1228. thou mayst best, art best able to help, thou hast most power. Lucina was a title both of Juno and Diana; see Vergil, Eccl. iv. 10.

1267. This line seems to mean that there is nothing new under the sun.

1271. This is the 're Licurgo' of the Teseide, vi. 14; and the Lycurgus of the Thebaid, iv. 386, and of Homer, II. vi. 130. But the description of him is partly taken from that of another warrior, Tes. vi. 21, 22.

1276. kempe heres, shaggy, rough hairs. Tyrwhitt and subsequent editors have taken for granted that kempe=kemped, combed (an impossible equation); but kempe is rather the reverse of this, and instead of smoothly combed, means bristly, rough, or shaggy. In an Early English poem it is said of Nebuchadnezzar that

'Tholghe (hollow) were his yghen anunder (under) campe hores.'

Early Eng. Alliterative Poems, p. 85, l. 1695. Campe hores = shaggy hairs (about the eyebrows), and corresponds exactly in form and meaning to kempe heres. See Glossary.

1284. for-old, very old. See next note.

1286. for-blak is generally explained as for blackness; it means very black.

1294. Colers of, having collars of. Some MSS. read Colerd of. Colerd is not an improbable form: cf. 'as they (the Jews) were tied up with girdles... so were they collared about the neck.' (Fuller's Pisgah Sight of Palestine, p. 524, ed. 1869.)

torets, 'probably eyes in which rings will turn round, because each eye is a little larger than the thickness of the ring.'—Skeat. This appears from Chaucer's Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, i. 2. 1—'This ring renneth in a maner turet,' i.e. in a kind of eye. Warton, in his Hist. E. Poet. ed. 1871, ii. 314, gives several instances. It also meant a small loose ring. Cotgrave gives: 'Touret, the annulet, or little ring whereby a hawk's lune is fastened unto the jesses.'

1297. Emetrius is not mentioned either by Statius or by Boccaccio; cf. Tes. vi. 29, 17, 16, 41.

1302. cloth of Tars, 'a kind of silk, said to be the same as in other places is called Tartarine (tartarinum), but the exact derivation of which appears to be somewhat uncertain.'—Wright. Cf. Piers the Plowman, B. xv. 224, and Skeat's note to the same, C. xvii. 299.

1329. alle and some, 'all and singular,' 'one and all.'

1347. See the Teseide, vi. 8.

1359. And in hire howre. 'I cannot better illustrate Chaucer's astrology than by a quotation from the old Kalendrier de Bergiers, edit. 1500,
Sign. K. ii. b:—"Qui veult savoir comme bergiers seevent quel planete regne chacune heure du jour et de la nuit, doit savoir la planete du jour qui veult s'enquerir; et la premiere heure temporelle du soleil levant ce jour est pour celluy planete, la seconde heure est pour la planete esuivant, et la tierce pour l'autre," &c., in the following order: viz. Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, Sol, Venus, Mercury, Luna. To apply this doctrine to the present case, the first hour of the Sunday, reckoning from sunrise, belonged to the Sun, the planet of the day; the second to Venus, the third to Mercury, &c.; and continuing this method of allotment, we shall find that the twenty-second hour also belonged to the Sun, and the twenty-third to Venus; so that the hour of Venus really was, as Chaucer says, two hours before the sunrise of the following day. Accordingly, we are told in l. 1413, that the third hour after Palamon set out for the temple of Venus, the Sun rose, and Emily began to go to the temple of Diane. It is not said that this was the hour of Diane, or the Moon, but it really was; for, as we have just seen, the twenty-third hour of Sunday belonging to Venus, the twenty-fourth must be given to Mercury, and the first hour of Monday falls in course to the Moon, the presiding planet of that day. After this Arcite is described as walking to the temple of Mars, l. 1509, in the nexte houre of Mars, that is, the fourth hour of the day. It is necessary to take these words together, for the nexte houre, singly, would signify the second hour of the day; but that, according to the rule of rotation mentioned above, belonged to Saturn, as the third did to Jupiter. The fourth was the nexte houre of Mars that occurred after the hour last named.'—Tyrwhitt. 'In fact, just as Emily is three hours later than Palamon, so Arcite is three hours later than Emily.'—Skeat.

1362-1406. To be compared with the Teseide, vii. 43-49, and vii. 68.
1366. Adown, Adonis. See Ovid, Met. x. 593.
1380. 'I care not to boast of arms (success in arms).'
1381. Ne I ne axe, &c., are to be pronounced as ni naxe, &c. So in l. 1772 of this tale, Ne in must be pronounced as nin.
1394. wher I ryde or go, whether I ride or walk.
1395. fyres bete, kindle or light fires. Bete also signifies to mend or make up the fire; see l. 1434.
1413. The thridde hour inequal. 'In the astrological system, the day, from sunrise to sunset, and the night, from sunset to sunrise, being each divided into twelve hours, it is plain that the hours of the day and night were never equal except just at the equinoxes. The hours attributed to the planets were of this unequal sort. See Kalendrier de Berg, loc. cit., and our author's treatise on the Astrolabe.'—Tyrwhitt.
1428. a game, a pleasure.
1432. 'E coronò di quercia cereale;' Tes. vii. 74.
1436. In Stace of Thebes, in the Thebaid of Statius, where the reader will not find it. Cf. the Teseide, vii. 72.

1445. aboghte, atoned for. Cf. the phrase 'to buy dearly.'

1455. three formes. Diana is called Diva Triformis;—in heaven, Luna; on earth, Diana and Lucina, and in hell, Proserpina.

1507. the nexte waye, the nearest way. Cf. the Teseide, vii. 93.

1510. walked is, has walked.

1537. lyves creature, creature alive, living creature.

1547. do, bring it about, cause it to come to pass.

1579. 'As joyful as the bird is of the bright sun.' So in Piers Pl, B. x. 153.

1591. 'Men may outrun old age, but not outwit (surpass its counsel).'

Cf. 'Men may the wise at-renne, and nought at-rede.'—Troilus, iv. 1428, ed. Morris; (or iv. 1456).

'For of him (the old man) þu migt leren Listes and fele þewes, þe baldure þu migt ben:
Ne for-lere þu his redes,
For þe elder mon me mai of-riden
Betere þenne of-reden.'

'For of him thou mayest learn
Arts and many good habits,
The bolder thou mayest be.
Despise not thou his counsels,
For one may out-ride the old man
Better than out-wit.'

1593. agayn his kynde. According to the Compost of Ptolemeus, Saturn was influential in producing strife: 'And the children of the sayd Saturne shall be great jangeleres and chyders ... and they will never forgyne tyll they be revenged of theyr quarell.'—Wright.

1596. My cours. 'The course of the planet Saturn. This refers to the orbit of Saturn, supposed to be the largest of all. So it was, till Uranus and Neptune were discovered.'—Skeat.

1597. more power. The Compost of Ptolemeus says of Saturn, 'He is mighty of hymself. ... It is more than xxx yere or he may ronne his course. ... Whan he doth reygne, there is moche debate.'—Wright.

1604. In astrology, Leo is the 'mansion' of the Sun; but the first 10 degrees of the sign are called 'the face of Saturn.'

1611. 'Er fisue þer ben folfult, such þiamyn schal aryse, þorw fflodes and foul weder, ñruites schul fayle,
And so seip Saturne, and sent vs to warne.'

1646. In Sir Bevis, ed. Kölling, p. 134, we find—
'Sir Beues was ful glad, iwis,
Hise laynerys [printed layneres] he took anon,
And fastenyd his hawberk hym upon.'
1653. Cf. House of Fame, 1239, 1240:—
'Of hem that maken blody soun
In trumpe, beme, and clarioun.'
Also Tese, viii, 5:—'D'armi, di corni, nacchere e trombette.'
The Nakkárah or Najárah was a great kettle-drum, formed like a brazen cauldron, tapering to the bottom, and covered with buffalo-hide, often 3½ or 4 feet in diameter... The crusades naturalised the word in some form or other in most European languages, but in our own apparently with a transfer of meaning. Wright defines naker as "a cornet or horn of brass," and Chaucer's use seems to countenance this.—Marco Polo, ed. Yule, i. 303-4; where more is added. But Wright's explanation is a mere guess, and should be rejected. There is no reason for assigning to the word naker any other sense than 'kettle-drum.' Minot (Songs, iv. 80) is explicit:—
'The princes, that war riche on raw,
Gert nakers strike, and trumpes blaw.'
Hence a naker had to be struck, not blown. See also Naker in Halliwell's Dictionary. Boccaccio has the pl. nacchere; see above. Cf. Hous of Fame, 1239, 1240.
1679. As to the regulations for tournaments, see Strutt's Sports and Pastimes, book iii. c. 1. §§ 16-24; the passages are far too long for quotation. We may, however, compare the following extract, given by Strutt, from MS. Harl. 326. 'All these things done, thei were embatailed eche ageynste the othir, and the corde drawn before eche partie; and when the tyme was, the cordes were cutt, and the trump-ettes blew up for every man to do his devoir [duty]. And for to assertayne the more of the tourney, there was on eche side a stake; and at eche stake two kyngs of armes, with penne, and inke, and paper, to write the names of all them that were yolden, for they shold no more tournay.' And, from MS. Harl. 69, he quotes that—'no one shall bear a sword, pointed knife, mace, or other weapon, except the sword for the tournament.'
1682-1735. Cf. the Teseide, vii. 12, 131-2, 12, 14, 100-2, 113-4, 118, 19.
1688. 'Nor short sword having a biting (sharp) point to stab with.'
1707. Cf. Legend of Good Women, 635:—'Up goth the trompe.'
1742-66. Cf. the Teseide, viii. 5, 7, 14, 12, &c.
1744. 'In go the spears full firmly into the rest,'—i. e. the spears were couched ready for the attack.
'Thai layden here speres in areeste,
Togeder thai ronnen as fire of thondere,
That both here launces to-braste;
That they seten, it was grete wonder,
So harde it was that they gan threste;
Tho drownen thai oute here swordes kene,
And smyten togeder by one assente.'

The Sowdone of Babyloyne, l. 1166.

See Glossary, s.v. Arest.

1756-7. he...he=one...another. See Historical Outlines of English Accidence, p. 282. Cf. the parallel passage in the Legend of Good Women, 642-8.

1757. feet. Some MSS. read foot. Tyrwhitt proposed to read foo, foe, enemy; but see 1. 1692.

1766. wrought...wo, done harm to his opponent.

1768. Galgopheye. 'This word is variously written Colaphey, Galgaphey, Galapey. There was a town called Galapha in Mauritania Tingitana, upon the river Malva (Cellar. Geog. Ant. v. ii. p. 935), which perhaps may have given name to the vale here meant.'—Tyrwhitt. But doubtless Chaucer was thinking of the Vale of Gargaphie, where Actæon was turned into a stag:

'Vallis erat, piccis et acutâ densa cupressu,
Nomine Gargaphie, succinctae sacra Dianae.'

Ovid, Met. iii. 155, 156.

1788. swerdes lengthe. Cf.

'And then he bar me sone bi strenkith
Out of my sadel my speres lenkith.'

Ywaine and Gawin, ll. 421, 2.

1817. Which a, what a, how great a.

1825. al his chere may mean 'all his delight, as regarded his heart.'
The Harl. MS. alone inserts in before his chere.

1826. Elles. reads furie, as noted; so in the Teseide, ix. 4.

1828-1848. Cf. the Teseide, ix. 7, 8, 47, 48, 38, 26.

1831. The following is a very remarkable account of a contemporary occurrence, which took place at the time when a parliament was held at Cambridge, A.D. 1388, as told by Walsingham, ed. Riley, ii. 177.

'Tempore Parliamenti, cum Dominus Thomas Tryvet cum Rege sublimis equitaret ad Regis hospitium, quod fuit apud Bernewelle [Barnwell], dum nimis urget equum calcaribus, equus cadit, et omnia pene interiora sessoris dirumpit [cf. l. 1833]; protelavit tamen vitam in crastinum.'

The saddle-bow or arsoun was the 'name given to two curved pieces of wood or metal, one of which was fixed to the front of the saddle, and another behind, to give the rider greater security in his seat;’ Murray’s Eng. Dict. s.v. Arson. Violent collision against the front saddle-bow produced very serious results. Cf. the Teseide, ix. 8—‘ E ’l forte arcione gli premette il petto.’

1838. ‘Then was he cut out of his armour.’ I.e. the laces were cut, to spare the patient trouble.

1853. ‘As a remedy for other wounds,’ &c.

1854, 1855. charmes ... save. ‘It may be observed that the salves, charms, and pharmacies of herbs were the principal remedies of the physician in the age of Chaucer. Save (salvia, the herb sage) was considered one of the most universally efficiently mediæval remedies.’—Wright. Hence the proverb of the school of Salerno, ‘Cur moriatur homo, dum salvia crescit in horto?’

1864. nis nat but =is only. aventure, accident.

1867. O persone, one person.

1875. Gree, preëminence, superiority; lit. rank, or a step; answering to Lat. gradus (not gratus). The phrases to win the gree, i.e. to get the first place, and to bear the gree, i.e. to keep the first place, are still in common use in Scotland. See note to the Allit. Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, I. 1353, and Jamieson’s Dictionary.

1878. dayes thre. Wright says the period of three days was the usual duration of a feast among our early forefathers. As far back as the seventh century, when Wilfred consecrated his church at Ripon, he held ‘magnum convivium trium dierum et noctium reges cum omni populo laetificantes.’—Eddius, Vit. S. Wilf. c. 17.

1903. This al and som, i.e. this (is) the al and som, this is the short and long of it. With ll. 1903-50 compare the Teseide, x. 12, 37, 51, 54, 55, 64, 102-3, 62-3, 111-2.

1942. overcome. Tyrwhitt reads overnome, overtaken, the pp. of over-nimen; but none of the seven best MSS. have this reading.

1952. The real reason why Chaucer could not here describe the passage of Arcite’s soul to heaven is because he had already copied Boccaccio’s description, and had used it with respect to the death of Troilus; see Troil. V (Stanzas 7, 8, 9 from the end).

1957. ther Mars, &c., where I hope that Mars will, &c.; may Mars, &c.

2005-2104. The whole of this description should be compared with the funeral rites at the burial of Archemorus, as described in Statius, Thebaid, bk. vi; which Chaucer probably consulted, as well as the imitation of the same in Boccaccio's Teseide. For example, the 'tree-list' in ll. 2063–5 is not a little remarkable. The first hint of it is in Vergil, Æn. vi. 180; Statius took the hint, and amplified it. After which, it reappears in Boccaccio, Teseide, xi. 22; in Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 176; in the present passage; in Tasso, Gier. Lib. iii. 75; and in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1.8. Again, we may just compare ll. 2093–2097 with the following lines in Lewis's translation of Statius:—

'Around the pile an hundred horsemen ride,
With arms reversed, and compass every side;
They faced the left (for so the rites require);
Bent with the dust, the flames no more aspire.
Thrice, thus disposed, they wheel in circles round
The hallow'd corse: their clashing weapons sound.
Four times their arms a crash tremendous yield,
And female shrieks re-echo through the field.'

Moreover, Statius imitates the whole from Vergil, Æn. xi. 185–196. And Lydgate copies it all from Chaucer in his Sege of Thebes, part 3 (near the end).

2070. Amadrides; i.e. Hamadryades; see Ovid, Met. i. 192, 193, 690.

2095. loued (Elles.); heih (Harl.); bowe (Corp.).

2100. 'Chaucer seems to have confounded the wake-plays of his own time with the funeral games of the antients.'—Tyrwhitt. Cf. Troil. v. 304; and see 'Funeral Entertainments' in Brand's Popular Antiquities.

2104. in no disioynt, with no disadvantage.

2133–2135. that faire cheyne of love. This sentiment is taken from Boethius, lib. ii. met. 8: 'Pat þe world with stable feith / varieth acordable chaungynges // þat the contraryos qualite of elementz holden amonget hem self aliaunce perdurable / þat phebus the sonne with his goldene chariet / bryngeth forth the rosen day / þat the mone hath commandement ouer the nyhtes // whiche nyhtes hesperus the eue-sterre hat[h] browt / þat þe se gredy to flowen constreyneth with a certeyn ende hise floodes / so þat it is nat l[e]ueful to strechche hise brode termes or bowndes vpon the erthes // þat is to seyn to couere alle the erthe // Al this a-cordaine of thinges is bownden with looue / þat gouerneth erthe and see and [he] hath also commandementz to the heuenes and yif this looue slakede the brydelis / alle thinges þat now louen hem togederes / wolden maken a batayle contynuely and stryuyen

Morris, p. 62. And cf. the Teseide, ix. 51; and Homer, II. viii. 19. Also Rom. de la Rose, 16988:

‘La bele chaœne dorée
Qui les quatre elements enlace.’

2147. Chaucer again is indebted to Boethius, lib. iii. pr. 10, for what follows: ‘For al þing þat is cleped imperfit, is proued imperfit by þe amenusynge of perfeccioun, or of þing þat is perfit; and her-of comeþ it, þat in every þing general, yif þat þat men seen any þing þat is imperfit, certys in þilke general þer mot ben somme þing þat is perfit. For yif so be þat perfeccioun is don awey, men may nat þinke nor seye fro whennes þilke þing is þat is cleped imperfit. For þe nature of þinges ne token nat her bygynnyng of þinges amenused and imperfit; but it procediþ of þingus þat ben al hool and absolut, and descendeþ so doune into outerest þinges and into þingus empty and wiþoute frvyt; but, as I haue shewed a litel her-byforne, þat yif þer be a blisfulnesse þat be frele and vein and imperfit, þer may no man doute þat þer nys som blisfulnesse þat is sad, stedfast, and perfit.’—Chaucer (as above), p. 89.

2161–2210. Cf. the Teseide, xii. 7–10, 6, 11, 13, 9, 12–17, 19.

2184. So in Troilus, iv. 1586: ‘Thus maketh vertu of necessite;’ and in Squire’s Tale, pt. ii. l. 247 (Group F, l. 593): ‘That I made vertu of necessite.’ It is from Le Roman de la Rose, 14217:—

‘S’il ne fait de necessité Vertu.’

Cf. Horace, Carm. i. 24:—

‘Durum! sed leius fit patientia
Quidquid corrigere est nefas.

THE NONNE PRESTES TALE.

1. stope. Lansd. MS. reads stoupe, as if it signified bent, stooped; but the verb stoope is a weak verb. Stope is the past participle of the (formerly) strong verb steppen, to step, advance. Stope in age = advanced in years. Roger Ascham has almost the same phrase: 'And [Varro] beyng depe stept in age, by negligence some wordes do scape and fall from him in those bookes as be not worth the taking up,' &c.—The Schoolmaster, ed. Mayor, p. 189; ed. Arber, p. 152.

12. Ful sooty was hir bower, and eek hir halle. The widow's house consisted of only two apartments, designated by the terms bower and hall. Whilst the widow and her 'daughters two' slept in the bower, Chanticleer and his seven wives roosted on a perch in the hall, and the swine ensconced themselves on the floor. The smoke of the fire had to find its way through the crevices of the roof. See Our English Home, pp. 139, 140. Cf.

'At his beds feete feeden his stalled teme,
His swine beneath, his pullen ore the beame.'

19. hertes suffisance, a satisfied or contented mind, literally heart's satisfaction. Cf. our phrase 'to your heart's content.'

22. wyn ... whyt nor reed. The white wine was sometimes called 'the wine of Osey' (Alsace); the red wine of Gascony, sometimes called 'Mountrose,' was deemed a liquor for a lord. See Our English Home, p. 83; Piers Pl. prol. l. 228.

25. Seynl bacoun, singed or broiled bacon.

an ey or tweye, an egg or two.

26. deye. The daia (from the Icel. deigja) is mentioned in Domesday among assistants in husbandry; and the term is again found in 2nd Stat. 25 Edward III (A.D. 1351). In Stat. 37 Edward III (A.D. 1363), the deye is mentioned among others of a certain rank, not having goods or chattels of 40s. value. The deye was mostly a female, whose duty was to make butter and cheese, attend to the calves and poultry, and other odds and ends of the farm. The dairy (in some parts of England, as in Shropshire, called a dey-house) was the department assigned to her. See Prompt. Parv., p. 116.

29. In Caxton's translation of Reynard the Fox, the cock's name is Chanteclar. In the original, it is Canticleer; from his clear voice in singing. In the same, Reynard's second son is Rosseel; see l. 514.
31. organ. This is put for organs or organa. It is plain, from gon in the next line, that Chaucer meant to use this word as a plural from the Lat. organa. Organ was used until lately only in the plural, like bellows, gallows, &c. 'Which is either sung or said or on the organ played.'—Becon's Acts of Christ, p. 534. It was sometimes called a pair of organs. See note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 7.

34. Cf. Parl. of Foules, 350:

'The cok, that orlge is of thorpes lyte.'

35, 36. 'The cock knew each ascension of the equinoctial, and crew at each; that is, he crew every hour, as 15° of the equinoctial make an hour. Chaucer adds [l. 34] that he knew the hour better than the abbey-clock. This tells us, clearly, that we are to reckon clock-hours, and not the unequal hours of the artificial day. Hence the prime, mentioned in l. 377, was at a clock-hour, at 6, 7, 8, or 9, suppose. The day meant is certainly May 3, because the sun had passed the 21st degree of Taurus (see fig. 1 of Astrolabe). The date May 3 is playfully denoted by saying that March was complete, and also (since March began) thirty-two days more had passed. The words 'since March began' are parenthetical; and we are, in fact, told that the whole of March, the whole of April, and two days of May were done with. March was then considered the first month in the year, though the year began with the 25th, not with the 1st; and Chaucer alludes to the idea that the Creation itself took place in March. The day, then, was May 3, with the sun past 21 degrees of Taurus. The hour must be had from the sun's altitude, rightly said (l. 379) to be Fourty degrees and oon. I use a globe, and find that the sun would attain the altitude 41° nearly at 9 o'clock. It follows that prime in this passage signifies the end of the first quarter of the day, reckoning from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m.'—Skeat's Astrolabe, p. lxi. This rough test, by means of a globe, is perhaps sufficient; but Mr. Brae proved it to be right by calculation. Taking the sun's altitude at 41°, he 'had the satisfaction to find a resulting hour for prime of 9 o'clock a.m. almost to the minute.' It is interesting to find that Thynne explains this passage very well in his Animadversions on Speght's Chaucer; ed. Furnivall, p. 62, note i.

The notion that the Creation took place on the 18th of March is alluded to in the Hexameron of St. Basil (see the A.S. version, ed. Norman, p. 8, note j), and in Ælfric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, i. 100.

37. Fifteen degrees of the equinoctial = an exact hour. See note to l. 35 above.

40. and batailed. Lansd. MS. reads embateled, indented like a battlement.

41. as the Ieet, like the jet. Beads used for the repetition of prayers were frequently formed of jet. See note to Prol. 159, p. 140.
50. damoysele Pertelote. Cf. our 'Dame Partlet.'

'T'll be as faithful to thee
As Chaunticleer to Madame Partelot.'

The Ancient Drama, iii. p. 158.

54. in hold, in possession. Cf. 'He hath my heart in holde;'
Greene's George a Greene, ed. Dyce, p. 256.

55. loken in every lith, locked in every limb.

59. my lief is faren on loude, my beloved is gone away. Probably the refrain of a popular song of the time.

69. herte deere. This expression corresponds to 'dear heart,' or 'deary heart,' which still survives in some parts of the country.

73. take it agrief=take it in grief, i.e. to take it amiss, to be offended.

74. me mette, I dreamed; literally it dreamed to me.

76. my sweeene rede aright, bring my dream to a good issue; literally 'interpret my dream favourably.'

80. Was lyk. The relative that is often omitted by Chaucer before a relative clause.

88. Avoy (Elles.); Away (Harl.).

103. See the Chapter on Dreams in Brand's Pop. Antiquities.

104. fume, the effects arising from gluttony and drunkenness. 'Anxious black melancholy fumes.'—Burton's Anat. of Mel. p. 438, ed. 1845. 'All vapours arising out of the stomach,' especially those caused by gluttony and drunkenness. 'For when the head is heated it scorcth the blood, and from thence proceed melancholy fumes that trouble the mind.'—Ibid. p. 269.

108. rede colera. . . red cholera caused by too much bile and blood (sometimes called red humour). Burton speaks of a kind of melancholy of which the signs are these—'the veins of their eyes red, as well as their faces.'

113. the humour of melancholy. 'The name (melancholy) is imposed from the matter, and disease denominated from the material cause, as Brucel observes, μελανχολία quasi μελαναχόλη, from black choler.' Fracastorius, in his second book of Intellect, calls those melancholy 'whom abundance of that same depraved humour of black choler hath so misaffected, that they become mad thence, and dote in most things or in all, belonging to election, will, or other manifest operations of the understanding.'—Burton's Anat. of Melancholy, p. 108, ed. 1805.

118. 'That cause many a man in sleep to be very distressed.'

120. Catoun. Cato de Moribus, l. ii. dist. 32; somnia ne cures. 'I observe by the way, that this distich is quoted by John of Salisbury, Polycrat. l. ii. c. 16, as a precept viri sapientis. In another place, l. vii. c. 9, he introduces his quotation of the first verse of dist. 20 (l. iii.) in this manner:—"Ait vel Cato vel alias, nam autor incertus est."'—Tyrwhitt.
121. do no fors of = take no notice of, pay no heed to.

143. ‘Wormwood, centaury, pennyroyal, are likewise magnified and much prescribed, especially in hypochondriacal melancholy, daily to be used, sod in whey. And because the spleen and blood are often misaffected in melancholy, I may not omit endive, succory, dandelion, fumitory, &c., which cleanse the blood.’—Burton’s Anat. of Mel. pp. 432, 433. See also p. 438, ed. 1845.

144. ellebor. Two kinds of hellebore are mentioned by old writers; ‘white hellebore, called sneezing powder, a strong purger upward’ (Burton’s Anat. of Mel. p. 439), and ‘black hellebore, that most renowned plant, a famous purger of melancholy.’—Ibid. p. 442, ed. 1845.

150. gramunt mercy, great thanks; this in later authors is corrupted into grammercy or gramercy.

156. so met I thee, so may I thrive, (or prosper).

164. Oon of the gretteste auctours. ‘Cicero, De Divin. l. i. c. 27, relates this and the following story, but in a different order, and with so many other differences, that one might be led to suspect that he was here quoted at second-hand, if it were not usual with Chaucer, in these stories of familiar life, to throw in a number of natural circumstances, not to be found in his original authors.’—Tyrwhitt. But Warton thinks that Chaucer took it rather from Valerius Maximus, who has the same story; i. 7.

184. Oxes; written oxe in Hl. Cp. Ln; where oxe corresponds to the older English gen. oxan, of an ox—oxe standing for oxen (as in Oxenford, see note on l. 285 of Prologue). Thus oxes and oxe are equivalent.

190. took of this no keep, took no heed of this, paid no attention to it.

201. sooth to sayn, to say (tell) the truth.

222. gapinge. The phrase gaping upright occurs elsewhere (see Knightes Tale, l. 1150), and signifies lying flat on the back with the mouth open. Cf. ‘Dede he sate uprighte,’ i.e. he lay on his back dead. —The Sowdone of Babyloyne, l. 530.

225. Harrow, a cry of distress; a cry for help. ‘Harrow! alas! I swelt here as I go.’—The Ordinary; see vol. iii. p. 150, of the Ancient Drama.

227. outsterte (Elles.); upsterte (Harl.).

264. And preyde him his viage for to lette, And prayed him to abandon his journey.

265. to abyde, to stay where he was.

269. my thinges, my business-matters.

290. ‘Kenelm succeeded his father Kenulf on the throne of the Mercians in 821 [Haydn, Book of Dates, says 819] at the age of seven years, and was murdered by order of his aunt, Quenedreda. He was subsequently made a saint, and his legend will be found in Capgrave, or in the Golden Legend.’—Wright.
St. Kenelm's day is Dec. 13. Alban Butler, in his Lives of the Saints, says:—[Kenulph] 'dying in 819, left his son Kenelm, a child only seven years old [see l. 297] heir to his crown, under the tutelage of his sister Quindride. This ambitious woman committed his person to the care of one Ascobert, whom she had hired to make away with him. The wicked minister decoyed the innocent child into an unfrequencyed wood, cut off his head, and buried him under a thorn-tree. His corpse is said to have been discovered by a heavenly ray of light which shone over the place, and by the following inscription:—

'In Clent cow-pasture, under a thorn,
    Of head bereft, lies Kenelm, king born.'

Milton tells the story in his History of Britain, bk. iv. ed. 1695, p. 218, and refers us to Matthew of Westminster. He adds that the 'inscription' was inside a note, which was miraculously dropped by a dove on the altar at Rome. Our great poet's version of it is:—

'Low in a Mead of Kine, under a thorn,
    Of Head bereft, li'th poor Kenelm King-born.'

Clent is near the boundary between Staffordshire and Worcestershire.

Neither of these accounts mention Kenelm's dream, but it is given in his Life, as printed in Early Eng. Poems, ed. Furnivall (Phil. Soc. 1862), p. 51. St. Kenelm dreamt that he saw a noble tree with wax-lights upon it, and that he climbed to the top of it; whereupon one of his best friends cut it down, and he was turned into a little bird, and flew up to heaven. The little bird denoted his soul, and the flight to heaven his death.

297. For traisoun, i. e. for fear of treason.
304. Cipion. The Somnium Scipionis of Cicero, as annotated by Macrobius, was a favourite work during the middle ages.
318. See the Monkes Tale, B. 3917, and the note; in Ch. II., p. 193.
321. Lo heer Andromacha. Andromache's dream is not to be found in Homer. It is related in chapter xxiv. of Dares Phrygius, the authority for the history of the Trojan war most popular in the middle ages. See the Troy-book, ed. Panton and Donaldson (E. E. T. S.), l. 8425.
331. as for conclusion, in conclusion.
334. teille ... no store, set no store by them; reckon them of no value; count them as useless.
336. nevere a del, never a whit, not in the slightest degree.
340. This line is repeated from the Compleynt of Mars, l. 61.
343-346. 'By way of quiet retaliation for Partlet's sarcasm, he cites a Latin proverbial saying, in l. 344, 'Mulier est hominis confusio,' which he turns into a pretended compliment by the false translation in ll. 345, 346.'—Marsh. Tyrwhitt quotes it from Vincent of Beauvais, Spec. Hist. x. 71.
355. lay, for that lay. Chaucer omits the relative, as is frequently done in Middle English poetry; see l. 80.
374. See note on ll. 35, 36.
388. In the margin of MSS. E. and Hn. is written 'Petrus Comestor,' who is probably here referred to.
392. See the Squieres Tale, 287, and the note.
395. col-fox, a treacherous fox. Tyrwhitt quotes Heywood for cole-prophet and colepoysoun. See Glossary for the explanation of the prefix col.
407. Genilton; the traitor who caused the defeat of Charlemagne, and the death of Roland; see Book of the Duchesse, 1121, and the note in Skeat's edition of the Minor Poems.
408. See Vergil, Æn. ii. 259.
420. bute it to the bren, sift the matter; cf. the phrase to boulit the bran. See the argument in Troilus, iv. 967; cf. Milton, P. L. ii. 560.
422. Boece, i. e. Boethius. See note to Kn. Tale, 325.
Bradwardyn. Thomas Bradwardine was Proctor in the University of Oxford in the year 1325, and afterwards became Divinity Professor and Chancellor of the University. His chief work is 'On the Cause of God' (De Causâ Dei). See Morley's English Writers, ii. p. 62.
424. for was probably inserted by the scribes, who did not know that nedely was a word of three syllables. See l. 425, which is perhaps to be scanned with Nedely as a trisyllable, and simple as a monosyllable.
436. Colde, baneful, fatal. The proverb is Icelandic; 'kold eru opt kvenna-ráð,' cold (fatal) are oft women's counsels; Icel. Dict. s.v. kaldr.
451. Phisiologus. 'He alludes to a book in Latin metre, entitled Physiologus de Naturis xii. Animalium, by one Theobaldus, whose age is not known. The chapter De Sirenis begins thus:—
Sirenae sunt monstra maris resonantia magnis
Vocibus et modulis cantus formantia multis,
Ad quas incante veniunt saepissime nautae,
Quae faciunt sompnum nimia dulcedine vocum.'—Tyrwhitt.
See The Bestiary, in Dr. Morris's Old English Miscellany, pp. 18, 207; and cf. Rom. Rese, 680.
457. In Douglas's Virgil, prol. to Book xi. st. 15, we have—'Becum thou cowart, cradoun recryand,
And by consent cry cok, thi deid is dycht;'
i.e. if thou turn coward, (and) a recreant craven, and consent to cry cok, thy death is imminent. In a note on this passage, Ruddiman says—
'Cok is the sound which cocks utter when they are beaten.' But it is probable that this is only a guess, and that Douglas is merely quoting Chaucer. To cry cok! cok! refers rather to the utterance of rapid cries of alarm, as fowls cry when scared. Brand (Pop. Antiq. ed. Ellis, ii. 58) copies Ruddiman’s explanation of the above passage.

480. ‘As I hope to retain the use of my two eyes.’ So Havelok, l. 2545:

‘So mote ich brouke mi Rith eie!’
And l. 1743:—‘So mote ich brouke finger or to.’
And l. 311:— ‘So brouke i euere mi blake swire!’

Swire=neck. See also Brouke in the Glossary to Gamelyn, ed. Skeat.

492. dawn Burnel the Asse. ‘The story alluded to is in a poem of Nigellus Wireker, entitled Burnellus seu Speculum Stultorum, written in the time of Richard I. In the Chester Whitsun Playes, Burnell is used as a nickname for an ass. The original word was probably brunell, from its brown colour; as the fox below is called Russel, from his red colour. — Tyrwhitt. The Latin story is printed in The Anglo-Latin Satirists of the Twelfth Century, ed. T. Wright, i. 55. There is an amusing translation of it in Lowland Scotch, printed as ‘The Unicornis Tale’ in Small’s edition of Laing’s Select Remains of Scotch Poetry, ed. 1885, p. 285. It tells how a certain young Gundulfus broke a cock’s leg by throwing a stone at him. On the morning of the day when Gundulfus was to be ordained and to receive a benefice, the cock took his revenge by not crowing till much later than usual; and so Gundulfus was too late for the ceremony, and lost his benefice. Cf. Warton, Hist. E. P., ed. 1871, ii. 352. As to the name Russel, see note to l. 29.

515. Tyrwhitt cites the O. F. form gargate from the Roman de Rou. Several examples of it are given by Godefroy.

527. O Gaufred. ‘He alludes to a passage in the Nova Poetria of Geoffrey de Vinsauf, published not long after the death of Richard I. In this work the author has not only given instructions for composing in the different styles of poetry, but also examples. His specimen of the plaintive style begins thus:—

Neustria, sub clypeo regis defensa Ricardi,
Indefensa modo, gestu testare dolorem;
Exundent oculi lacrymas; exterminet ora
Pallor; connodet digitos tortura; cruentet
Interiora dolor, et verberet aethera clamor;
Tota peris ex morte sua. Mors non fuit ejus,
Sed tua, non una, sed publica mortis origo.
O Veneris lacrymosa dies! O sydus amarum!
Illa dies tua nox fuit, et Venus illa venenum.
Illa dedit vulnus, &c.

These lines are sufficient to show the object and the propriety of

528. Richard I. died on April 6, 1199, on Tuesday; but he received his wound on Friday, March 26.

530. Why ne hadde I = O that I had.

537. streite sword = drawn (naked) sword. Cf. Aeneid, ii. 333, 334:—

Stat ferri acies mucrone corusco

Stricta, parata neci.'

538. See Aeneid, ii. 550–553.

543. Hasdrubal; not Hannibal's brother, but the King of Carthage when the Romans burnt it, b.c. 146. Hasdrubal slew himself; and his wife and her two sons burnt themselves in despair; see Orosius, iv. 13. 3, or Ælfred's translation, ed. Sweet, p. 212. Lydgate has the story in his Fall of Princes, bk. v. capp. 12 and 27.

574. Walsingham relates how, in 1381, Jakke Straw and his men killed many Flemings 'cum clamore consueto.' He also speaks of the noise made by the rebels as 'clamor horrendissimus.' See Jakke in Tyrwhitt's Glossary.

625. My Lord. A side-note in MS. E explains this to refer to the Archbishop of Canterbury; probably William Courtenay, archbishop from 1381 to 1396.

Additional Note to the Knightes Tale; 1. 319.

The note on p. 175 may be amended. The fable is practically the same as that of 'The Lion, the Tiger, and the Fox' in Croxall's edition of Æsop's Fables. In the modern edition by James (London, 1852), it is Fable No. 141, and is entitled 'The Lion, the Bear, and the Fox.' See N. and Q. 7 S. vi. 53, 90, 236.
GLOSSARY.

The following are the chief contractions used:

Dan. = Danish.  M.E. = Middle English.
F. = French.  O.H.Ger. = Old High German.
Ger. = German.  Prompt. Parv. = Promptorium Parvulorum.
Goth. = Gothic.
Icel. = Icelandic.
It. = Italian.

Sw. = Swedish.

An asterisk prefixed to a form signifies that such a form is theoretical.

A, one, single.  A.S. ðu, Ger. eih, one; Eng. indef. article an or a.  Cf. M.E. o, oo, one; ta, to, the one, the first.

A, in, on; cf. a-night, b 184; a-morwe, A 822; a-day, in the day, B 1705; a Goddes name, in God's name, A 854; a-three, in three, B 2076.  Cf. Mod. Eng. a-foot, asleep, a-hunting, a-building, &c.  A.S. and O.S. in, on.  It is still used in the South of England.

Abbey, abbey; C 34.

Able, fit, capable, adapted: A 167.  Lat. habilis (Lat. habeo, to have), convenient, fit: O.F. habile, able, expert, fit.

Aboghte (the pret. of abegge or aby), atoned for, suffered for: B 1445; pp. aboght, 2242.  A.S. abyegan, to redeem, pay the purchase-money, to pay the penalty (from byegan, to buy).  Cf. the modern expression 'to buy it dear.'  'So shalt thou honge in helle and bye it dere:' Occleve, De Reg. Princip. 162.  Shakespeare and Milton have, from similarity of sound, given the sense of aby to the verb abide, as in the following examples:

'If it be found so, some will dear abide it.'—Julius Caesar, iii. 2. 119.

'Disparage not the faith thou dost not know, Lest to thy peril thou abide it dear.'—Mids. Night's Dream, iii. 2. 175.

'How dearly I abide that boast so vain.'—Paradise Lost, iv. 87.

Abood, delay: B 107.  See Abide.

Abrayde, started (suddenly), awoke: c 188. A.S. bregdan, to move, turn, weave; Icel. bregda, to draw out a sword, to pull down, to awake, to leap. The M. E. braide has all these meanings, and signifies also to cry out suddenly, to scold; whence Eng. braid, upbraid. The A.S. brægd, bregd, Icel. bragð, signifies a sudden start, blow, deceit; hence the M. E. phrase 'at a braid,' = in a trice. The Icel. bragð is also applied to the features or to the gestures, by which an individual is characterized; hence Prov. Eng. braid, to resemble, pretend; Eng. braid, appearance (Bailey). Shakespeare uses braid =braided, of deceitful manner.

Abregge, to shorten, abreide: b 2141. F. a-breger; Lat. abbreviare. Cf. M. E. agrege, agredge, to aggravate, from F. aggréger (from Lat. gravis).

Abyde, Abyden (pret. abod, abood; pp. abiden), abide, delay, wait for, await: b 69, 2124; c 260. A.S. abidan, bidan, to wait, remain; Goth. beidan, to expect.

Accomplice, to accomplish: b 2006.

Accord, Acord, agreement: A 838, c 59.

Achatour, purchaser, caterer: A 568. See Achat.

Accordaunt, according to, agreeing, suitable: A 37.

Acorde, to agree, suit: A 244, 830; pp. Acorded, b 356. F. accorder, to agree (from Lat. cor, the heart).

Adamant, adamant: B 1132. Gr. άδαμας (a privative, δαμαω, to tame, subdue), the hardest metal, probably steel (also the diamond); whence Eng. adamantine.

'In adamantine chains and penal fire.'—Milton, Par. Lost, i. 48. Adamant is sometimes (but incorrectly) applied to the magnet or loadstone. Cf. 'Well she's a most attractive adamant.'—T. Heywood, ed. Collier, p. 8.

Adrad, pp. in great dread, afraid: A 605. Cf. M. E. of-drad, much afraid; where the prefix of is intensive, like for-, Lat. fer-.

Affection, affection, hope: B 300.

Affirmed, confirmed: b 1491.

Affrayed, terrified, scared: C 458. F. effraye, to scare, appal; effroi, terror: whence affray.

Affyle, to file, polish: A 712. F. affiler, It. affilare, to sharpen; F. fil, edge; Lat. filum, a thread.

Agast, terrified, agast: B 1483; Agaste him, was terrified: b 1566. Cf. M. E. gasliche, ghastly, gassthe, fear; A. S. gesian, Goth. us-gaijan, to terrify; us-geisnan, to be amazed; Dan. gys, terror.

Agayn, Ageyn, again, against, towards: A 66, 801. A.S. ongean, on-gén, a-gén, opposite, towards, against; géan, opposite, against; O. Sw. gen, opposite; Ger. gegen, against.
Agon, Agoon, gone, past, B 418, 924; the past participle of M. E. verb agon, to go, pass away. A. S. ágán, ágangan. We also meet with ygo in the same sense, and some etymologists have erroneously supposed that the prefix a- is a corruption of y-.

Agrief, in grief: C 73. 'To take it agrief' = to take it amiss, feel aggrieved, be displeased.

Al, all, whole (cf. al a = a whole, A 584); quite, wholly (cf. al redy, al armed, &c.); although (cf. al speke he, al have I, al be it): A 71, 76, 297, 734, B 1406. See Alle.

Alaunts, a species of dog: B 1290. They were used for hunting the boar. Sp. and Ital. alano. Tyrwhitt says they were much esteemed in Italy in the fourteenth century. Gualv. de la Flamma (ap. Mura- tor. Antiq. Med. A. E. t. ii. p. 394) commends the governors of Milan 'quod equos emissarios equabus magnis commiscuerunt, et procreati sunt in nostro territorio DESTRARII nobiles, qui in magno pretio habentur. Item CANES ALANOS altae staturae et mirabilis fortitudinis nutrire studue- runt.'

Al be, although: A 297.

Alderbest. See Aller.

Ale-stake, a horizontal stake projecting from an ale-house to support a sign, A 667; 'le moy d’une taverne' (Palsgrave). It appears that a bush was often placed at the end of the ale-stake.

Algate, always: A 571. M. E. algates; cf. swagate, thus; North Prov. Eng. gate, way; Eng. gait; Icel. gata, a path; Sw. gata, way, street.

Alighte, (pp. alight), alighted: A 722, B 125. Cf. the phrase 'to light upon.' A. S. glihtan, to descend, alight.

Alle, pl. of al (all): A 26, 53.

Aller, of all (gen. pl. of al). The older forms are alre, alre, aller, later alder, alliner; our aller, of us all, A 823; hir aller, of them all, A 586; alderbest, best of all, A 710, &c. The insertion of d or th serves merely to strengthen the word, as in lend, spend (older forms leue, spene).

Alliance, alliance: B 2115. F. allier, to ally; Lat. ligare, to tie; alligare, to bind.

Also, as: A 730. A. S. ealswá; M. E. al-se, ase. These forms shew that as is a contraction from al-so. Cf. Ger. also, als; O. Fris. alsa, ase, ase.

Amblere, a nag: A 469.

Amiddles, amidst, in the middle: B 1151.

Amonges, amongst: A 759.

Amorwe, on the morrow: A 822.

Amounte, to amount to, signify, denote: B 1504.

And = an, if: B 356.

Anhanged, hung up, C 242. The prefix an = on, up.

Breme, fiercely, furiously: B 841. A. S. bréme, loud, keen; M. E. bream, fierce. ‘The Saxons fled, before that were full brime.’ (Hardyng, p. 115.) Cf. Lat. fremo, to roar. Professor Max Müller has the following capital note on certain analogues connected with this root:—’What is the English brim? We say a glass is brim full, or we fill our glasses to the brim, which means simply “to the edge.” We also speak of the brim of a hat, the Ger. Brüme. Now originally brom [in M. E. brim = sea, ocean] did not mean every kind of edge or verge, but only the line which separates the land from the sea. It is derived from the root bhram, which, as it ought, exhibits bh in Sanskrit, and means to whirl about, applied to fire, such as bhrama, the leaping flame, or to water, such as bhrama, a whirlpool, or to air, such as bhrimi, a whirlwind. Now what was called aestus by the Romans, namely the swell or surge of the sea, where the waves seemed to foam, to flame and to smoke (hence æstuary), the same point was called by the Teutonic nations the whirl or the brim. After meaning the border-line between land and sea, it came to mean any border, though in the expression “fill your glasses to the brim” we still imagine to see the original conception of the sea rushing or pouring in toward the dry land. In Greek we have a derivative verb ἐπίρραμάσσειν, to toss about; in Lat. fremo, chiefly in the sense of raging or roaring, and perhaps frendo, to gnash, are akin to this root. In the Teutonic languages other words of a totally different character must be traced back to the same original conception of bhram, to whirl, to be confused, to be rolled up together, namely, bramble, broom, &c.—Lectures on the Science of Language, Second Series, pp. 217, 218.

There, on the Tiber, one of the seven hills was called the Collis Palatinus, and the hill was called Palatinus from Pales, a pastoral deity, whose festival was celebrated every year on the 21st of April, as the birthday of Rome. It was to commemorate the day on which Romulus, the wolf-child, was supposed to have drawn the first furrow on the foot of that hill, and thus to have laid the foundation of the most ancient part of Rome, the Roma Quadr' a. On this hill, the Collis Palatinus, stood in later times the houses of Cicero and of his neighbour and enemy Catiline. Augustus built his mansion on the same hill, and his example was followed by Tiberius and Nero. Under Nero, all private houses had to be pulled down on the Collis Palatinus, in order to make room for the emperor's residence, the Domus Aurea, as it was called, the Golden House. This house of Nero's was henceforth called the Palatium, and it became the type of all the palaces of the kings and emperors of Europe.' —Max Müller, Science of Language, Second Series, p. 251.

Vese, a rush of wind, draught, gush; lit. an impulse: B 1127.
Lat. impetus (gloss in Elles. MS). See note. 'The oldest form is the O. H. Ger. fius, prompt, quick; whence, by dropping the u, the A. S. fis, quick, eager; Icel. fiss, eager; hence the verbal forms in Swed. fossa, to drive; Icel. fysa, to impel, exhort, A. S. fesian, to drive away (whence probably the Prov. Eng. feaze, feese, or pheese, which means both to drive, as in Stanyhurst's Virgil (Nares), and to chastise, as in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida, ii. 3. 215); also the Icel. sb. fysi, an impulse, inclination, wish, which exactly corresponds to the word in question. For examples, observe—'ac he fysde forð fáne genehe,' but he poured forth arrows enough (Death of Byrhtnoth, ed. Grein, l. 269); and 'fis and forðgeorn,' eager and desirous of going forward (id. 1. 281). Hence probably the modern Eng. fuss.—Skeat.
